A LETTER OF DOCTOR LINGARD TO MR. BUTLER,

In Reply to the Charge.

L O N D O N :

JOHN MURRAY, ALBEMARLE-STREET.

M.DCCC.XXVI.

“ I DO NOT HOLD, THAT THE ROMAN CATHOLIC RE-“ LIGION IS ONE WHICH ENJOINS DISLOYALTY :

“ I DO NOT HOLD THE MAXIM, THAT FROM THEIR “ SCRUPLES ABOUT THE OATH OF SUPREMACY THEY ARE “ A DISLOYAL PEOPLE :

“ I DO NOT HOLD, THAT THEY MAINTAIN ANY SUCH “ BELIEF, AS THAT THE POPE MAY DEPOSE PROTESTANT “ PRINCES, OR ABSOLVE CATHOLIC SUBJECTS FROM ALLE-“ GIANCE TO THEM ; OR THAT NO FAITH IS TO BE KEPT “ WITH HERETICS, OR PERSONS OF A DIFFERENT RELI-“ GIOUS PERSUASION FROM THEMSELVES.”

Extract from the Speech of the Rt. Rev. Dr. Horsley, Bishop of St. Asaph, on the 10th May 1805 ; p. 131.

TABLE OF CONTENTS.

LETTER to CHARLES BLUNDELL, Esq. on the Answers to "the Book of the Roman Catholic Church" - page xix

PRELIMINARY LETTER - - - - - page 1

I.—Mr. Townsend's assertion, that a decree of the Council of Constance, which an article of the creed
of Pope Pius IV. compels every conscientious Romanist to adopt, sanctions the doctrine "that "faith is not to be kept with heretics" - 2
Denied - - - - - 3

II.—His insinuation, that "a passage in the Book of
"the Roman Catholic Church, deserves a harsh
"name for intimating that Romanism is founded
"on Scripture" - - - - - 5
Denied - - - - - ib.

III.—His assertion respecting Bossuet's "Exposition of "Faith" - - - - - 7
Denied - - - - - 8

IV.—His assertion that Arminianism, Calvinism, Quakerism and Socinianism, may be found in the writings of the Romanist Divines - - - - - 9
Denied - - - - - 10

V.—His assertion, that all the new orders of the Romamists appeal to Popery, and protest against the Scripture - - - - - 11
Denied - - - - - ib.

LETTER I.

EXTENSIVE DIFFUSION OF THE ROMAN CATHOLIC

RELIGION - - - - - 12

- 1.—Mr. Townsend's vindication and adoption of Doctor Southey's expression, that "the Roman Catholic Religion is a prodigious structure of imposture and wickedness" - - - - - ib.
Duly noticed - - - - - ib.

- 2.—His intimation that "if the adherents to Rome are as numerous as they are represented to be in the Book of the Roman Catholic Church, the vigilance of Protestants should be proportioned to their danger" - - - - - 13

Answered,—Foreign Catholic States have shown more attachment to the British Empire than Foreign Protestant States - - - 14

LETTERS II AND III.

THE ANGLO SAXONS.

- 1.—Identity of the Doctrine preached to them, and the Doctrine of the Council of Trent, denied by Mr. Townsend - - - - - 15 Asserted and shown - - - - - ib.
- 2.—His observation on Roman Catholic Miracles - 17
The doctrine of the Roman Catholic Church respecting the belief of Miracles, stated 18

LETTERS IV AND V.

MR. TOWNSEND'S ASSERTION OF THE PURER FAITH OF THE WELSH CHRISTIANS - - - - - 21

Denied - - - - - ib.

LETTER VI.

ST. DUNSTAN.

Mr. Townsend's charge against the Author of "the Book of "the Roman Catholic Church," of "Historical Dis- "honesty," for omitting to mention St. Dunstan's speech at the Synod of Calne	- - - - -	22
Disproved	- - - - -	ib.

LETTERS VII. & VIII.

I.—INVESTITURES AND IMMUNITIES	- - -	25
II.—ST. THOMAS A BECKET	- - -	26
Mr. Townsend's assertion, that "in defending St. Thomas, "the author of 'the Book of the Roman Catholic "Church,' has quoted the half only of a passage cited "by him from Mr. Turner's History to prove a point, "which was refuted by the remainder"	- -	28
Transcription of the whole passage: it completely disproves the charge.
III.—Statement by the Author of "the Book of the Roman Catholic Church," of the rise, extension, and fall of the Temporal Power of the Pope	- -	29

LETTER IX.

KING JOHN.

1.—Mr. Townsend's declaration, that "he is almost "tempted to believe all the accusations of Protestants "against the fairness and candour of the Church of "Rome; and could also accuse the Author of 'The "Book of the Roman Catholic Church, of insidious "Jesuitism,' for his representation of the conduct of "King John, in the cession of the kingdom to the "Pope	- - - - -	36
Both accusations shown to be perfectly groundless, ib.

KING JOHN—continued.

- 2.—His charge, that “the third Canon of the Fourth Council of Lateran, is an article of the Faith of Roman Catholics;” that “it declares the Pope’s right to Temporal Dominion;” and that “the disclaimer of the Pope’s right to temporal dominion by the Roman Catholics is not valid, and cannot be depended upon, in consequence of their acknowledging the paramount authority of the Council” - - - - 37
- 3.—Discussion of the Charge - - - - 41
- 4.—Particular Discussion of the Third Canon of the Fourth Council of Lateran - - - - 43
- Mr. Townsend’s intimation of the insufficiency of Catholic disclaimers, even upon oath, of the Pope’s Temporal Dominion; because the Catholics recognize a paramount authority in the Pope to discharge their consciences from the obligation of such an oath and disclaimer - 49
- Admission, by the writer, that, if, while the Catholics take the oath or make the disclaimer, they recognize a paramount authority, which may dispense with its obligations,—they are perjured villains* - - - - 52
- The charge is most horrible* - - - - ib.
- And is most unjust* - - - - ib.
- (See the late Bishop Horsley’s equal reprobation of it, in the title leaf to the work.)
- 5.—Mr. Townsend’s allegation, that to give validity to Catholic denial of the Pope’s universal temporal dominion, the Pope and his government must deny it - - 54
1. Such a denial is perfectly unnecessary - - ib.
2. Whether necessary or unnecessary, it has been given - - - - ib.

LETTER X.

- VIEW OF THE ROMISH SYSTEM - - 58
- Remarks upon some assertions of Mr. Townsend,* ib.

LETTER XI.

RISE OF THE REFORMATION.—THE MENDICANT ORDERS.

—PERSECUTION UNDER THE HOUSE OF LANCASTER - 60

1.—Mr. Townsend's imputations to the "Author of the " Book, of 'a lamentable error of judgment, in attri-
" buting the rise of the Reformation to the general
" diffusion of the opinion of Manes'" - - - ib.

2.—Mr. Townsend's charge, that, "the Author intimates " that the sentiments of the Reformers, in the age
" of Cranmer and Luther, and consequently the " opinions of the Protestants of the Church of " England at present, are the identical errors which
" are imputed to Manes" - - - - - ib.

3.—Mr. Townsend's charge, that "no controversialist was " more unfortunate than the Author has been, in " reviving the exploded doctrine, that the faith of
" the Protestants was the creed of Manichæus," ib.

4.—His intimation, that, "the Author insinuates, in a man" ner unworthy of him, that the political opinions
" of the Manichæans, were the real prelude to the " doctrines of liberty and equality, now frighthfully
" agitated" - - - - - 61

Explicit denial, that the Author ever made any such attribution, intimation, assertion or insinuation - - - - - 61

2.—The Author's unqualified condemnation of all religious persecutions:—Remarks on the utility of Convents of Nuns,—as permanent institutions for female education - - - - - 63

3.—The Author's grateful acknowledgment of the reception of the French Exiles in this country, 65

Mr. Townsend's approbation of Milton's assigning "a " place in the Paradise of Fools, to Friars, and all that
" trumpery" - - - - - 70

Duly noticed - - - - - ib.

LETTER XII. & XIII.

THE REFORMATION.—HENRY VIII.—EDWARD VI.

Remarks on Mr. Townsend's Question "Whether the Pro"testant parochial clergy will bear comparison with the
"Monks" - - - - -	73
Mr. Townsend's assertions, that "the Reformation has "produced an Increase of Temporal Happiness in the
"Nation" - - - - -	75
2. An Increase of Spiritual Wisdom - - -	ib.
3. An Increase of Morality - - -	77
4. That the revival of Letters is owing to it,	79
5. And that the Editors of the Hebrew text of the Old Testament are Protestants - - -	81
Questioned.

LETTER XIV.

QUEEN MARY.

1.—Mr. Townsend's statement of the extenuation in "The "Book of the Roman Catholic Church, of Queen
"Mary's persecutions - - - - -	82
Very imperfect.
2.—His impeachment of the Church of Rome for still sanctioning persecution - - - - -	83
Dismissed.
3.—His assertion that Mr. Todd has ably defended
Cranmer - - - - -	ib.
Controverted.
4.—His charge, that, according to the account given in "The Book of the Roman Catholic Church," Queen Mary's character was, by her religion,
"changed from a compassionate, liberal, pious,
"moral exemplary woman, into a savage, rancorous
"and bigotted persecutor" - - - - -	84
Refuted.

LETTER XV.

QUEEN ELIZABETH.

XV. 1.

Mr. Townsend's assertion, that by the omission in "The Book of the Roman Catholic Church," of any notice of the state of Europe and England, at the accession of Queen Elizabeth, "the Author of the book, almost seems "to have demonstrated, that he reserves his talents for "his own profession, and his sincerity for the courtesy "of private life" - - - - - 87

Transcription of the statements of each from the Author's Historical Memoirs: it refutes both both charges - - - - - 88

XV. 2.

Mr. Townsend's Eulogy of the Pacific Tendency of Elizabeth's first measures respecting Religion - 91

Controverted.

1.—Did morality and justice authorize Elizabeth to make Episcopalian Protestantism the religion of the state? - - - - - 92

2.—Or to enact, that adherence to the ancient religion, was a crime against the state; and that non-conformity to the new ritual, should be heavily punishable - 93

3.—Or to make the belief of the spiritual supremacy of the Pope, legal evidence of unsound allegiance - 94

4.—Observations on the excessive pretensions of some Popes - - - - - 95

5.—If it follows from a subject's being a Catholic, that his allegiance to a Protestant king cannot be depended upon, it must equally follow, from a subject's being a Protestant, that his allegiance to a Catholic king cannot be depended on - - - - - 96

Justice requires in each case, that criminality should be proved, before the guilt is considered to be established - - - - - ib.

XV. 3.

- Mr. Townsend's Eulogy of the Moderation of the Laws passed in the first year of Queen Elizabeth - - 98
- 1.—As being generally defensible on account of the hostile
 proceedings of foreign powers - - - - - ib.
He omits to mention the hostility of many of Elizabeth's proceedings towards them.
 - 2.—The English Catholics did not co-operate in these hostile proceedings - - - - - ib.
 - 3.—Mr. Townsend's assertion, that treason was discovered
 among the Catholics - - - - - 99
*They were guilty of no treason, under the antient
 law of the country* - - - - - ib.
 - 4.—If all treasons alleged against Catholic individuals were true, they would not inculpate the body, or, what may be called,—a proportion of it - - - - - ib.
 - 5.—Justice required of Mr. Townsend, that, when he mentioned treasons of Catholics, he should have explicitly informed his readers, whether he meant to charge them with that, which was treason by the ancient law of the land ; or with that, which was made treason by Elizabeth's religious innovations - - - - - 99
 - 6.—Nature of the Queen's supremacy :—as it was claimed by her, and refused by the Catholics and Puritans, it is now disbelieved by the generality of Protestants - ib.
 - 7.—Mr. Townsend's assertion of the comparative mildness
 of the penal law passed in the first year of Queen
 Elizabeth - - - - - 101
*Denied.—It consigned two-thirds of her subjects,
 for adhering to the ancient and actual religion
 of the country, to degradation, vexation, want,
 beggary and inanition* - - - - - 102

XV. 4.

- 1.—The Act of the Fifth year of Queen Elizabeth against the Roman Catholics - - - - - 105
Caused by the Bull of Pius V.—which cannot be mentioned in too strong terms of condemnation - - - - - ib.
- 2.—Mr. Townsend's assertion, that the refusal of Catholics to attend the Protestant service, was produced by Pope Pius's Bull - - - - - 107
The contrary shown.
- 3.—Mr. Townsend's assimilation of the Jacobins in the time of George III. to the Catholics in the time of Elizabeth - - - - - 109
Does not hold.

XV. 5.

- Mr. Townsend's justification of the Acts passed in the 13th, 23d and 27th years of Queen Elizabeth, against the Catholics - - - - - 110
- 1.—They were religious persecutions - - - - - ib.
- 2.—If any Catholics asserted Elizabeth was not his lawful Sovereign,—or arrayed against her the religious feelings of her people,—or brought the Bull into the kingdom,—or impeached her title to the Crown,—they were really guilty of treason,—but nothing of this can be charged upon them - - - - - ib.
- 3.—Mr. Townsend's assertion, that “ there would be again
 “ men, who would be ready to disclaim every tie
 “ and sacrifice, even life itself, in obedience to the “ supposed will of God, in submission to their “ priesthood, and their spiritual Lord the Pope - 111
If this imports that,—if, under any possible circumstance, a similar Bull should now be promulgated, and his Majesty's Catholic subjects required to obey it, their conduct would be such, as Mr. Townsend suggests,—it is a most groundless imputation - - - - - ib.

XV. 3.

- Mr. Townsend's Eulogy of the Moderation of the Laws
passed in the first year of Queen Elizabeth - - 98
- 1.—As being generally defensible on account of the hostile
proceedings of foreign powers - - - ib.
He omits to mention the hostility of many of Elizabeth's proceedings towards them.
- 2.—The English Catholics did not co-operate in these hostile proceedings - - - - - ib.
- 3.—Mr. Townsend's assertion, that treason was discovered
among the Catholics - - - - - 99
*They were guilty of no treason, under the antient
law of the country* - - - - - ib.
- 4.—If all treasons alleged against Catholic individuals were true, they would not inculpate the body, or, what may be called,—a proportion of it - - - - - ib.
- 5.—*Justice required of Mr. Townsend, that, when he mentioned treasons of Catholics, he should have explicitly informed his readers, whether he meant to charge them
with that, which was treason by the ancient law of the land; or with that, which was made treason by Elizabeth's religious innovations* - - - - - 99
- 6.—Nature of the Queen's supremacy:—as it was claimed by her, and refused by the Catholics and Puritans, it is now disbelieved by the generality of Protestants - ib.
- 7.—Mr. Townsend's assertion of the comparative mildness
of the penal law passed in the first year of Queen
Elizabeth - - - - - 101
*Denied.—It consigned two-thirds of her subjects,
for adhering to the ancient and actual religion
of the country, to degradation, vexation, want,
beggary and inanition* - - - - - 102

XV. 4.

- 1.—The Act of the Fifth year of Queen Elizabeth against the Roman Catholics - - - - - 105
Caused by the Bull of Pius V.—which cannot be mentioned in too strong terms of condemnation - - - - - ib.
- 2.—Mr. Townsend's assertion, that the refusal of Catholics to attend the Protestant service, was produced by Pope Pius's Bull - - - - - 107
The contrary shown.
- 3.—Mr. Townsend's assimilation of the Jacobins in the time of George III. to the Catholics in the time of Elizabeth - - - - - 109
Does not hold.

XV. 5.

- Mr. Townsend's justification of the Acts passed in the 13th, 23d and 27th years of Queen Elizabeth, against the Catholics - - - - - 110
- 1.—They were religious persecutions - - - - - ib.
- 2.—If any Catholics asserted Elizabeth was not his lawful Sovereign,—or arrayed against her the religious feelings of her people,—or brought the Bull into the kingdom,—or impeached her title to the Crown,—they were really guilty of treason,—but nothing of this can be charged upon them - - - - - ib.
- 3.—Mr. Townsend's assertion, that “ there would be again
 “ men, who would be ready to disclaim every tie
 “ and sacrifice, even life itself, in obedience to the “ supposed will of God, in submission to their “ priesthood, and their spiritual Lord the Pope - 111
If this imports that,—if, under any possible circumstance, a similar Bull should now be promulgated, and his Majesty's Catholic subjects required to obey it, their conduct would be such, as Mr. Townsend suggests,—it is a most groundless imputation - - - - - ib.

- 4.—Mr. Townsend's crimination of the Author of "The Book of the Roman Catholic Church, for calling "the Bull of Pius, merely—'illaudable.'" - 111
The charge is totally unfounded:—the Author has applied to the Bull several of the strongest expressions of reprobation in the English language:—and the word "illaudable," standing singly, is shown to be equivalent to the word "infamous" - - - 112
- 5.—Mr. Townsend's inculpation of the whole Catholic body in the Massacre at Paris, on St. Bartholomew's day - - - - - 114 Repelled.
- 6.—His charge against Dr. Lingard, of "utmost unfairness," for not mentioning the rejoicings at Paris on the Massacre - - - - - 116
Neither are they mentioned by Hume or Carte - - - - - ib.
- 7.—His imputing to the Author, "a deplorable attempt to reconcile Father Campian's petition, and the dispensation, with the asserted perfect loyalty of the "Romanists" - - - - - ib.
The Author has made no such attempt, and has condemned both the petition and dispensation - - - - - ib.
- 8.—Mr. Townsend mentions, the Insurrection of the Earls of Northumberland and Westmorland - - 117
But does not mention the refusal of the Catholics to join them - - - - - ib.
- 9.—His assertion, that the persecutions by Protestants of Catholics, are not to be imputed to the Protestant Church,—because their lawfulness was never taught by their councils or creeds - - - - - ib.
As much imputable to their Church as those of Catholics to theirs - - - - - 118

QUEEN ELIZABETH—continued.

- 10.—His entire approbation of the Act of the 27 Elizabeth; by which, on a discovery of a plot against her, by the Pope, the King of Spain and the Duke of Guise to invade England, she banished the Priests and Jesuits, upon pain of death - - - 118
He brings no evidence of the plot,—and is required to prove that any priest in England was concerned in it - - - 119
- 11.—He alleges Thockmorton's Treason - - 120
Discredited by the late Dr. Robertson and Lord Auckland - - - - - ib.
- 12.—He produces examples of persecutions by, and regicidal doctrine of, some Foreign Catholics - ib.
Is silent on Protestant persecutions and regicidal doctrines - - - - - ib.
- 13.—He cites Bishop Taylor's assertion, that the statute against the Priests was not passed, till after their own confessions, that many of them had come into England, to instigate the loyal to the execution of the Bull - - - - - ib.
Not one such confession.
- 14.—The refusal of the Priests to profess their allegiance to the Queen, by a satisfactory answer to the six questions - - - - - 123
Their answers lamented and blamed:—the refusal would have justified strong precautionary measures:—but did not justify Elizabeth's new creations of felonies, premunires, and treasons - - - - - 124
- 15.—His account of Campian's conduct and trial - ib.
Shown to contain much misrepresentation - 125
- 16.—His account of the views and objects of the Missionary Priests - - - - - ib.
Unsupported by fact - - - - - ib.
- 17.—His Vindication of Hume's charge against the Seminarists - - - - - 127
Replied to - - - - - 128

- 18.—His charge against the Author, that “ his references “ respecting Ireland deserve the severest repro-“ bation ” - - - - - 133
The whole passage produced, and left to the reader’s judgment - - - - - 134

XV. 6.

- 1.—His denial of the loyalty of the conduct of the Catholics, while England was threatened by the Spanish Armada - - - - - 136
No ground for the denial - - - - - 137
- 2.—His Interrogations,—designed to charge Catholics with persecuting principles,—and to acquit Protestants of them - - - - - 136
An explicit answer to each - - - - - ib.
- 3.—Accuses the Author of “ Sophistry and Disingenuness ” - - - - - 139
Of the former he may have been unintentionally guilty:—Never guilty of the latter - 140
- CONCLUSION - - - - - ib.

LETTER XVI.

THE GUNPOWDER CONSPIRACY - - 146

I.

- Mr. Townsend’s assertion, that the English Catholics were extensively engaged in it - - - - - ib.
Denied - - - - - ib.

II.

- His assertion, that the English Catholics have uniformly refused, even in our own age, the security of loyalty to our Temporal Sovereign - - - - - 147
Denied - - - - - ib.

THE GUNPOWDER CONSPIRACY—continued.

III.

His assertion, that the Author of “ The Book of the Roman “ Catholic Church candidly acknowledges, that no single “ fact has been discovered, which proves Cecil’s privity
 “ to the plot, but seems unwilling that this reluctant “ conviction of his own mind, should influence his “ readers” - - - - - 148

The Author admits that this would have been a most shameful disingenuousness.—He transcribes the whole passage, and leaves it without note or comment, to the judgment of his readers - - - - - ib.

IV.

His assertion, that the Gunpowder Conspiracy can be justly charged on the whole body of the Roman Catholics, 154
Refuted - - - - - ib.

V.

- 1.—His misrepresentation of Garnet’s answer to Catesby, 159
- 2.—His misrepresentation of the account given in “ The “ Book of the Roman Catholic Church,” of the number of the Catholics engaged in the conspiracy - - - - - ib.
- 3.—His assertion, that the Author terms the conspiracy
 “ improbable” - - - - - 160
Denied - - - - - ib.
- 5.—Cites the Author’s expression, that, “ Garnet might be “ found guilty in a court of law, while a court of “ honour would think gently of his case,”—as if it referred to his equivocations - - - - - 160
The whole passage is cited, and shows it had no reference whatever to these - - - - - 162

- 6.—His assertion that, “no expression of indignation, no phrase of contempt, for Garnet’s doctrines of equivocation, escape from the Author of The Book of the Roman Catholic Church” - 163

The Author calls the doctrine, “odious and pernicious;” and says, that “it saps the foundations of honourable intercourse in society, and fair dealing between man and man.”

164

- 7.—Mr. Townsend mentions, that the Author’s affirmation, that “the result of his researches at the State Paper Office, had been favourable to the Catholic cause,—had excited in many the most painful impressions” - - - - - ib.

Several instances stated, in which the result was favourable to the Catholics - - - 165

Mr. Townsend’s concealment of several facts connected with the plot, which show the innocence of the Catholic body - - - - - 167

XVI. 6.

Examples of attempts, similar to that of the Gunpowder Plot, of Protestants against Catholic Princes - - - - - 169

XVI. 7.

The oath of allegiance required by James I. from the English Catholics - - - - - 173

Several inaccuracies in Mr. Townsend’s account of it - - - - - ib.

XVI. 8.

General view of the laws passed against the Catholics in the reign of Elizabeth and James - - - - - 175

himself on this tenet, is left by the Author, to the taste, the feeling, and reflection, of every gentleman in the world.

4. JAMES II.—Mr. Townsend's assertion, that the Author declares that the measures of that monarch might be denominated a project for general religious toleration - - - - - 193
Shown to be a misrepresentation - - - - - 194
- 5.—The Bill of Rights and Act of Settlement - 195
 Postscript - - - - - 196

L E T T E R

TO

CHARLES BLUNDELL, ESQ. :

Containing the Titles of the Works written in reply to "the Book of the Roman Catholic Church;"—and Remarks on some Passages in them.

DEAR SIR,

IF a multitude of Answers to a work be a proof of its merit, "the Book of the Roman Catholic Church" has pretensions to be thought meritorious. Within a short time after it issued from the press, several answers to it appeared, and parts of it were commented upon in several other publications. I long hesitated on the plan which I ought to adopt in answering them. To answer each regularly and minutely, would make it necessary for me to write as many books as there were answers. This my occupations and time of life,

Quindecimùm trepidavit ætas

Claudere lustrum, HORACE.

rendered quite impossible. I therefore determined to write a full reply to such one of my answerers as had made most objections to my work, and urged them most strongly; to reply to such other of the objections as should seem to me to call for particular notice; and to leave the rest for future discussion.

The first part of the plan, I have executed in my letters to Mr. Townsend: The second, in the letter which I have now the honour to address to you. I shall mention in it the titles of all the works to which Doctor Southey's "BOOK OF THE "CHURCH" has given rise, and occasionally advert to some passages in them. In the last number of the Quarterly Review, it is called "a splendid controversy:—peace and praise to us all!"

You will see, after my last letter to Mr. Townsend, a transcription of Dr. Phillpotts's letter to me, on a passage in a work published 17 years ago by Dr. Lingard; and a letter in reply to it, which Dr. Lingard has done me the honour to address to me. I am sure you will read it with great satisfaction.

III.

A LETTER ADDRESSED TO THE AUTHOR OF THE BOOK OF THE ROMAN CATHOLIC CHURCH. BY APOSTOLICUS. 8vo. 1825. BAIN.

I CANNOT give you a better account of this work than by transcribing the author's preface:—"The Roman Catholic writers of the present day have a two-fold object in view, the advancement of their political interests, and the re-establishment of their fallen hierarchy. To the first I have no objection. The latter I regard with that instinctive aversion, which must be felt by every one that has contemplated the pure and glorious fountain of light and truth, at the bare mention of the triumph of darkness and superstition."

Upon this I only observe, that the Irish Roman Catholics have never lost their hierarchy, and that the English are perfectly satisfied with the vicarial prelacy, by which they are now governed.

IV.

THE REFORMATION AND THE PAPAL SYSTEM: REMARKS ON TWO LETTERS UPON THESE SUBJECTS IN THE BOOK OF THE ROMAN CATHOLIC CHURCH, 8vo. 1825. LONGMAN, HURST, REES, ORME, BROWN, AND GREEN, PATERNOSTER ROW; AND T. TAYLOR, LIVERPOOL.

ABLY and politely written: the chief object of the author is to shew the civil and religious blessings, which this country has acquired by the reformation. With this view, he discusses the six points proposed for consideration in the 12th Letter in "the Book of the Roman Catholic Church." Those, who wish to decide upon this part of the subjects in discussion between Doctor Southey, and the author of "the Book of the Roman Catholic Church," should peruse this work attentively. An outline of it appeared in some letters in a Liverpool newspaper, under the signature of Libra.

The author particularly animadvertes upon the reflections in "the Book of the Roman Catholic Church" on Martin Luther and Theodore Beza.

With respect to Luther, I am fully sensible that when Luther wrote with coolness and deliberation, he wrote well. Some of his letters, in the controversy between him and Erasmus, shew great clearness of perception, command of language, and power of composition. But, when Luther did not moderate his genius, his works were often filled with brutality, grossness and arrogance. This I have mentioned, but have not, I believe, exaggerated, in my Letters to Doctor Southey. It is remarkable that Luther, confessedly the most violent of the reformers, receded less than any from the Roman Catholic church.

With respect to Beza, the writer has convinced me, that, in bringing forward, in the manner done by me, the blameable verses of that reformer, I did wrong. Searches in the British Museum, to which the work in question led me, have convinced me, 1st, That they were published by Beza in his 16th year, before he embraced, at least openly, the reformed religion ; 2dly, That he never afterwards republished them ; 3dly, and that he professed publicly his repentance of having published them. Man, after this, has no right to reproach Beza with them.

“ TWO LETTERS ADDRESSED TO THE AUTHOR OF “ THE BOOK OF THE ROMAN CATHOLIC CHURCH, “ UPON CERTAIN PASSAGES IN HIS BOOK, AND “ SHEWING, FROM HIS OWN EXPOSITION OF THE “ ROMAN CATHOLIC CREED, THE INADMISSIBILITY “ OF ROMAN CATHOLICS INTO THE LEGISLATURE “ AND GOVERNMENT OF PROTESTANT ENGLAND.
 “ BY A LAY MEMBER OF THE UNIVERSITY OF “ OXFORD. PP. 168. 8VO. HATCHARD AND “ SON.”

THIS work is written with elegance, method and perspicuity. Many of the author's criticisms deserve observation ; I shall confine myself, at present, to his general charge against “ the Book of the Roman Catholic Church.” “ I could have wished,” he says, “ that your Book had fully answered to its title ; and instead of contenting yourself with pointing out some inaccuracies in Doctor Southey's Historical Narrative, and charging him with want of candour, sincerity or fair argument (without yourself taking sufficient care to avoid these faults), attempting to disprove some things, which can never be freed from doubt, and to extenuate or excuse facts, which “ had far better be passed sub silentio, because “ they admit of no satisfactory extenuation or “ excuse ; and worse than all, meeting his his“ torical details of human ambition, hypocrisy, “ depravity and cruelty, with recriminations and “ counter-charges,—that you had addressed your “ great talents to the pith and marrow of the sub“ ject, and have devoted yourself to prove, that “ the Roman Catholics of the present times are,

 “ by their creed, their dogmas, their priesthood,
 “ and their ecclesiastical discipline and institutions,
 “ as trust-worthy governors and legislators for “ these kingdoms as Protestants themselves.”

But is not the plan adopted in “The Book
 “ of the Roman Catholic Church,” the only plan which I could adopt to do justice to my cause?
 Dr. Southey had reviled the Roman Catholic religion in the strongest terms ; had called it “ a pro“ digious structure of imposture and wickedness ;”
 had asserted that the Popery, as he terms it,
 of the Roman Catholics corrupts their moral and civil principles, and renders their allegiance unsound. To vindicate my religion, my brethren in faith, and myself, against these heinous charges, it was incumbent upon me to render an account of her faith. With this view, I mentioned three works, in which it is unfolded in a manner suited to the different capacities of readers ; “The Catechism of “ the Council of Trent,”—“ Bossuet’s Exposition
 “ of Faith,”—and “ Bishop Challoner’s Summary
 “ of Christian Doctrine.” I prefixed to my work

the Profession of Faith of Pope Pius IV. ; and, in a separate chapter, stated in the words of the Council of Trent, such doctrines of our creed as the Profession of Pius had described by reference to that Council. All other doctrines I averred to be no part of our creed ; and explicitly repudiated all obligation of believing them. What better could I have done to show the real tenets of the moral, civil and religious creed of my church ? or to repel the charge that we are not trustworthy governors and legislators for Protestant England ?

As to recrimination ;—speaking generally, it is a sorry mode of argument, but it is unavoidable in some cases ; in mine, it could not be avoided. Dr. Southey averred in the strongest language, that the lawfulness of religious persecution, was a principle of our church ; and professed to prove it by producing instances, in which Catholics had been guilty of it. To disprove it, after disclaiming the tenet in the strongest manner, and shewing the explicit disclaimers of it, by Catholics, I produced instances equally numerous and equally unjustifiable, of Protestant persecutions. I then called on Dr. Southey to assign one good reason, why the criminality of Catholics, in the instances produced by him, should be charged on the Catholic creed or ascribed to Catholic principles, if the equal criminality of Protestants, in the instances cited by me, should not be equally chargeable on their creed or ascribable to their religious principles.

This is the only recrimination which I have used, and Dr. Southey evidently drove me to it.

Most sincerely do I wish, all such recriminations, all such aspersions, all harshness of every kind, were at an end. I flatter myself that in all my writings, even in that which is now presented to you, a single word that offends against charity or civility cannot be found. I must again repeat the words of St. Francis, of Sales, that "a good Christian is never outdone in good manners." "We have solemnly protested," say the Roman Catholics, in their address of 1817,* "and do again solemnly protest, against all intemperate language, all rancorous and illiberal invectives, all harsh and insulting expressions. We bear no animosity to individuals of any communion, sect or party; we embrace all our countrymen and fellow citizens, as friends and brethren, and most sincerely do we wish to see all united in the participation of every right, and every blessing, which we solicit for ourselves."

PRACTICAL AND INTERNAL EVIDENCE AGAINST CATHOLICISM, WITH OCCASIONAL STRICTURES ON MR. BUTLER'S BOOK OF THE ROMAN CATHOLIC CHURCH; IN SIX LETTERS, ADDRESSED TO THE IMPARTIAL AMONG THE ROMAN CATHOLICS OF GREAT BRITAIN AND IRELAND. BY THE REV.

* Historical Memoirs of English, Irish and Scottish Roman Catholics, Vol. IV. p. 20.

JOSEPH BLANCO WHITE, M. A.; B. D. IN THE UNIVERSITY OF SEVILLE; LICENTIATE OF DIVINITY IN THE UNIVERSITY OF OSUNA; FORMERLY CHAPLAIN MAGISTRAL (PREACHER) TO THE KING OF SPAIN, IN THE ROYAL CHAPEL AT SEVILLE; FELLOW AND ONCE RECTOR OF THE COLLEGE OF ST. MARY A JESU, OF THE SAME TOWN; SYNODAL EXAMINOR OF THE DIOCESE OF CADIZ; MEMBER OF THE ROYAL ACADEMY OF BELLES LETTRES OF SEVILLE, &c. &c.; NOW A CLERGYMAN OF THE CHURCH OF ENGLAND; AUTHOR OF DOUBLADOS LETTERS FROM SPAIN. MURRAY.

VI. 1.

THIS Rev. gentleman in the postscript to his second Letter (p. 67), calls on his readers to compare the last article of my translation of Pope Pius's Creed with the original. My Translation is thus expressed:—"This true Catholic faith, out of which none can be saved, which I now freely profess and truly hold, I. N. promise, vōw and swear, most constantly to hold and profess the same, whole and entire to the end of my life. Amen." Here my translation closes:—Mr. Blanco White then transcribes the original of that clause, and inserts immediately after it, the following words as belonging to it, but which are not inserted in my translation:—"Atque a meis subditis, vel illis, quorum cura ad me in munere meo spectabit, teneri, doceri et prædicari, quantum in me erit, curaturum, ego idem N. spondeo, voveo et juro." Mr. Blanco White then informs his readers, that he noticed my omission of the last clause, in the New Times. Had I seen the notice, it would have put me upon inquiry; but Mr. Blanco White's book conveyed to me the first notice I had of his discovery.

My copy of the Creed is a transcription of that, which the late Dr. Challoner prefixed to his "Grounds of the Catholic doctrine, as contained in the profession of faith published by Pope Pius IV."—first published about 50 years ago, and now in its 12th edition. Doctor Challoner also has prefixed it to his edition of the Catholic Prayer Book, entitled "The Whole Manual." The words in question are omitted in both. An English version of the Profession of Faith, with the same omission, is also inserted in the Ordo Administrandi sacramenta, published under the sanction of the Catholic Prelates in this country, for the use of the English Catholic mission.

But the passage in question, is inserted in the Profession of Faith in the Bullarium of Cherubrinus, the Bullarium Magnum, and in a stereotype edition of the Canons of the Council of Trent, recently published at Paris. I am not apprised of any edition of the original, or of any version of it, except Dr. Challoner's, and the edition in the Ordo, from which it is absent.

Upon inquiry of those most likely to be well informed upon the subject, of the probable cause of Dr. Challoner's omission of the passage in his editions of the Profession of Faith Pius IV, I understand, that the clause is always retained, when the oath is tendered to priests, and always omitted, when the oath is tendered to the laity; and that the latter, (for till lately, priests were very seldom ordained in England), being of most frequent use in this country, Dr. Challoner naturally thought it was most proper to publish the profession in that form. I am confident that Mr. Blanco White is sufficiently informed of the high character of Dr. Challoner for learning, piety and integrity, to attribute his omission of the clause in question, to any sinister motive. Had I been apprised of the insertion of it in the original, I certainly should have given it its proper place in the translation of it which I prefixed to "the Book of the Roman Catholic Church."

VI. 2.

Mr. Blanco White (page 31, and note A. page 219), finds great fault with my translation of a passage in Paulus Emilius Veronensis. There is no end of verbal criticism, and I shall not, on this occasion, engage in it. I still maintain the propriety of my translation. My placing the original immediately under the translation,—as by doing it I furnished means for the instantaneous detection of any error which might have found its way into my translation,—must satisfy every honourable mind, that, if the error charged upon me exists, it was unintentional.

VI. 3.

Mr. Blanco White (page 51) rejoices to find the dogma of intolerance branded in "the Book of the Roman Catholic Church with the epithet of detestable; but cannot, he says, help wondering that a man, who thus openly expresses his detestation of that doctrine, should still profess obedience to a see, under whose authority the inquisition of Spain was re-established in 1814." He then asks, "if Catholics are so far improved under the Protestant government of England, as to be able to detest persecution, by what intelligible distinction do they still find it consistent to cling to the source of intolerance, which has inundated Europe with blood, and still shews its old disposition unchanged whenever it preserves an exclusive influence."

In answer to these observations, I beg leave to remark, that the passage to which Mr. Blanco White refers, is not the only one in which I have proscribed intolerance. My works, as I mentioned in the dedication to you of "the Book of the Roman Catholic Church," are numerous, perhaps too numerous: they now fill twelve octavo volumes. Among them, there is not more than one in which I have not, in the most strong and unqualified terms, advocated unlimited civil and religious liberty, or have not, in similar language, erprobated civil and religious intolerance. Of the inquisition, I have uniformly expressed myself in the harshest terms. In a postscript to my Address to Protestants, published in 1813, and most extensively circulated, I thus express myself:— “ Since this letter was written, I hear, with infinite “ pleasure, that by a legislative decree of the Cortes,

 “ the Spanish inquisition is utterly abolished. So “ perish every mode of religious persecution, by “ whom or against whomsoever raised !” In my Historical Memoirs of the English, Irish, and Scottish Catholics,* I gave a full account of the abominable process of the inquisition ; I say that, “ as a systematic perversion of forms of law to the “ perpetration of extreme injustice and barbarity,
 “ it holds, among the institutions outraging huma“ nity, a decided pre-eminence.”

“ Why then,” asks Mr. Blanco White, “ do
 “ Roman Catholics cling to the Pope ?”

My answer is that, we do not cling to him in the manner Mr. Blanco White suggests. We acknowledge in him no authority to sanction intolerance ; no authority to legislate in any temporal concern ; no authority to enforce his spiritual power by any temporal means. A Catholic, without ceasing to be such, may disapprove, may detest, may counteract the attempts of a Pope to establish an inquisition, or any other institution of intolerance.
 That both states and individuals have acted in this manner, in opposition to the Popes, is well known to Mr. Blanco White. All Austrian, German, Hungarian, Bohemian and French Roman Catholics, unimproved under Protestant government, cling,

* Vol. I. p. 104.

in the manner I have mentioned, to the Pope: not one of these states has allowed the establishment of the inquisition within it. All deny the Pope's authority to depose princes; all deny his temporal power. Can we therefore be said with justice, to cling to the Pope, in the manner in which this expression is constantly used by Mr. Blanco White?

After all, objectionable as the system of the inquisition certainly was, both in theory and practice, can it be said, that it was more objectionable in either than the system of penal law, which was organised and established by the codes of Elizabeth and James? Mr. Blanco White mentions, in affecting terms, the situation, to which his new opinions reduced his mother. I sincerely sympathize with him, and do not feel less indignation against the monstrous code of penal inflictions which occasioned it, than he expresses. But the penal codes of Elizabeth reduced many a mother, who would not inform, in certain cases, against her child, to similar woe. Neither should it be forgotten, that the object of the inquisition was to prevent the introduction of a new, and, as experience showed, a revolutionary religion; the object of Elizabeth's persecutions, was to eradicate the ancient and the actual religion of the country, in direct opposition to the wishes of a large majority of the nation; and, in the case of Ireland, in direct opposition to the acknowledged wish of the whole kingdom.

It sickens me to return to this sad subject. Why should Mr. Blanco White write a book, the evident tendency of which is to raise popular prejudice against us ; to perpetuate the laws under which we suffer ; and thus to eternize the depression of a large proportion of his brother men, of his brother Christians ; of those, with whom, not many years since, he walked in union, in the house of God ?

VI. 4.

Mr. Blanco White has accurately transcribed my version of the canon of the 10th session of the Council of Florence, which defined, that “ full power was delegated to the Bishop of Rome, “ in the person of St. Peter, to feed, regulate and “ govern the universal church, as expressed in “ the general councils and holy canons.”—“ When “ I examine,” says Mr. Blanco White, (page 33), “ the vague comprehensiveness of this decree, I can “ hardly conceive what else the Roman Catholics “ could be required to believe. Full power to feed, “ regulate and govern the universal church, can “ convey in the mind of the sincere Catholic, no “ idea of limitation.” But is not a very clear idea of limitation conveyed, by the words, “ as expressed in the councils and holy canons?” To these words, Mr. Blanco White seems, by his subsequent discussion of this passage, to have paid no regard. They denote that the plenitude of power conferred on the Holy See, by the first part of the sentence, is limited by the second to the exercise of it in that manner, which is prescribed by the general councils and holy canons. Thus the decree of the Council of Florence is explained by Bossuet.*

VI. 5.

Permit me to state succinctly, from an authority which cannot be questioned, the doctrine of the Roman Catholics, respecting exclusive salvation in their church, in opposition to the representation which Mr. Blanco White gives of it (p. 61), and in other parts of his work.

Roman Catholics hold, 1st, that whatever be the religious belief of the parents of a person who

* Defensio "Declarationis Ecclesiæ Gallicanæ, Pars II. Lib. 6. cap. 12; Pars III. Lib. 11. cap. 10." In the original Greek the expression is stronger than my version of it; and I must observe, that a Protestant translator of this celebrated canon expresses the limitation in question, more strongly than I have done. "We define, that Jesus Christ has given the Pope, in the person of St. Peter, the power to feed, to rule, and govern the Catholic church, as it is explained in the acts of the Œcumenical Councils, and in the Holy Canons." ("Dupin's Ecclesiastical History, translated from the French, London, 1699, Fol. Vol. XI. Fifteenth Century, p. 45.") The expression in the original is stronger than either of the translations. "Καὶ ἀντὶ ἐν Ἰω μακαριῷ Πέτρῳ τοῦ ποιμαίνειν, καὶ δευτεῖν, καὶ κυβέρεῖν τῇ Καθολικῇ ἐκκλησίᾳ ὑπὸ τοῦ κυρίου ἡμῶν Ἰησοῦ Χριστοῦ πλήρη ἐξουσίαν παραδεδοῦσθαι, καθ' ὃν ἴρόπον καὶ ἐν τοῖς πρακτικοῖς τῶν ὀικουμενικῶν συνόδων, καὶ ἐν τοῖς ἱεροῖς καινῶσι διαλαμβάνεται. Et ipsi in beato Petro pas- cendi, regendi ac gubernandi universalem ecclesiam a domino nostro Jesu Christo plenam potestatem traditam esse; quemadmodum etiam in gestis œcumenicorum conciliorum, et in sacris canonibus continetur." L'Abbe's Councils, Paris Edition, 1672, Tom. XIII. p. 515.

is baptized, and whatever be the faith of the person who baptizes him, he becomes, on the instant of his baptism, a member of the holy Catholic church, mentioned in the Apostle's creed. 2dly, That he receives on his baptism, justifying grace and justifying faith. 3dly, That he loses the former, by the commission of any mortal sin. 4thly, That he loses the latter by the commission of a mortal sin against faith, but does not lose it by the commission of a mortal sin of any other kind. 5thly, That without such wilful ignorance or wilful error, as amounts to a crime in the eye of God, a mortal sin against faith is never committed. And 6thly, That except in an extreme case, no individual is justified in imputing, even in his own mind, this criminal ignorance, or criminal error to any other individual.

I extract these propositions from "Charity and Truth," a work of the greatest authority among Roman Catholics, and recently republished under the sanction of the venerable prelates of the Roman Catholic church in Ireland.

Such, then, being the tenets of the Roman Catholic church on this important point, may want of charity upon it be objected to her? It cannot be objected to her by a Protestant of the Established church of England, as the Athanasian creed and its damnatory clause, form a part of her liturgy; —or by a Protestant of the Established church of Scotland, as the Protestants of that church, in their profession of faith of 1568, say, that out of the church there is neither life nor everlasting happiness ; or by a Protestant of the French Huguenot church, as in their catechism they profess, in their explanation of the tenth article of the creed, that out of the church there is nothing but death and damnation.

VI. 6.

Mr. Blanco White (p. 34, &c.) justly observes, that neither the belief, or disbelief of the Pope's deposing power, is an article of the Roman Catholic faith; and that the Roman Catholic church tolerates each opinion: this is unquestionably true. His theological disquisition upon this subject, it is not my province to discuss; all that I contend for is, that as an explicit profession of allegiance, and an explicit denial of the Pope's deposing power, have been sworn to by the English, Irish and Scottish Catholics, the belief or maintenance of that doctrine cannot, with any justice, be charged upon them, or considered to form a part of their creed, or even ranked among their opinions. Their denials upon oath of the deposing power, were, from the first, known to the Pope: the slightest murmur of his disapprobation of them has not been heard; and I am confident, that, although the disbelief of the Pope's deposing power is yet a tolerated opinion, there is not a single Catholic in the universe who believes it.

VI. 7.

Mr. Blanco White (p. 41) expresses his dissatisfaction with the questions proposed to the foreign Universities; and with their answers. As the questions satisfied Mr. Pitt, there certainly is reason to presume that they were framed properly. Mr. Blanco White wishes that the following question had been substituted in lieu of the three actually proposed:—

“ Can the Pope, in virtue of what the Roman Catholics believe his divine authority, command the assistance of the faithful, in checking the progress of heresy, by any means not likely to produce loss or danger to the Roman Catholic church; and can that church acknowledge the validity of any engagement to disobey the Pope in such cases? ”

My answer shall be short and explicit; and will, I trust, be satisfactory.

The Pope may, in virtue of what the Roman Catholics believe his divine authority, command the assistance of the faithful in checking the progress of heresy, by preaching and teaching, in the manner prescribed by the Gospel; BUT BY NO OTHER MEANS:—and the Roman Catholics may acknowledge the validity of any engagement to disobey the Pope, in any case in which he should command them to check heresy, BY ANY OTHER MEANS than those of preaching and teaching, in the manner prescribed by the Gospel.

This, the Universities, by their unqualified denial of the Pope's divine right to temporal power; in their answers, ;—this, the English, Irish and Scottish Catholics, by their unqualified denial of it in their oaths, have most distinctly asserted.

VI, 8.

One further observation on the work now before me, I shall offer you. In page 60, Mr. Blanco White informs us, that “ he knew very few “ Spanish priests whose talents or acquirements “ were above contempt, who had not secretly re- “ nounced their religion.” I have never been in Spain, and have known few Spanish priests : but I have conversed with many Spanish, and many English and Irish Roman Catholic gentlemen, intimately acquainted with the opinions, the manners, and the habits of the inhabitants of Spain. All assure me that there is not the slightest ground for this accusation.—Mr. Blanco White intimates, that something similar may be the case of the English Catholic priesthood, on account of “ the support “ which they seem to give to oaths so abhorrent “ from the belief of their church, as those which “ must precede the admission of members of that “ church into Parliament.” These are the Oaths of Supremacy and those against Transubstantiation and Popery. Here Mr. Blanco White has been miserably deceived. There is not, and there never was, a Roman Catholic priest, who supported these oaths or a similar oath ; or who did not believe, and, if called upon, did not explicitly declare, that a Roman Catholic would, by taking them, absolutely abjure the Roman Catholic religion.

LETTER TO CHARLES BUTLER, ESQ. OF LINCOLN'S INN, IN VINDICATION OF ENGLISH PROTESTANTS FROM HIS ATTACK UPON THEIR SINCERITY, IN HIS 'BOOK OF THE ROMAN CATHOLIC CHURCH.' BY C. J. BLOOMFIELD, BISHOP OF CHESTER. THIRD EDITION. TO WHICH IS ADDED, A POSTSCRIPT, IN REPLY TO MR. BUTLER'S LETTER TO THE AUTHOR. 8vo. MAWMAN. To this Work I replied by "A LETTER TO THE RIGHT REV. C. J. LETTERS TO CHARLES BUTLER, ESQ. ON THE THEOLOGICAL PARTS OF HIS 'BOOK OF THE ROMAN CATHOLIC CHURCH,' WITH REMARKS ON CERTAIN WORKS OF DOCTOR MILNER, DOCTOR LINGARD, AND ON SOME PARTS OF THE EVIDENCE OF DOCTOR DOYLE, BEFORE THE TWO COMMITTEES OF THE HOUSES OF PARLIAMENT, BY THE REVEREND HENRY PHILPOTTS, D.D. RECTOR OF STANHOPE. 8vo. MURRAY.

AS fair specimens of the spirit and style of this publication, and of the worth of the charges brought in it against me, I select from it—I. The author's criminations of my statements of the Roman Catholic doctrine of Purgatory ;—II. His criminations of my statement of the Roman Catholic doctrine of Sacramental Absolution ;—III. And his criminations of the expression “ Dominium album,” used by me in a former work, to describe the Pope’s spiritual authority, in extraordinary cases of a spiritual nature, and exerted by Pius VII, in his transactions with Napoleon.*

Beginning with the first, I shall copy from “ the “ Book of the Roman Catholic Church,” the passage respecting Purgatory, reprehended by Doctor Phillpotts ;—2, then copy his remarks upon it, and his citation from Calvin, of the passage in that author, to which I referred ;—3, then copy the parts of that passage which are omitted by Doctor Phillpotts ;—4, then state the results.

Transcription of the Passage in “ The Book of the Roman Catholic Church ” (p. 104), respecting Purgatory, which is reprehended by Dr. Phillpotts.

“ As I am not writing a work of controversy,
“ I shall say little on the articles in your (Dr.
“ Southey’s) present chapter, which remain to be “ discussed.

“ As to the existence of Purgatory, for the belief

 “ us, that, (to use the language of Dr. Johnson),
 “ ‘ the generality of mankind are neither so obsti-“ nately wicked, as to deserve everlasting punish“ ment; nor so good, as to merit being admitted “ into the society of blessed spirits; and that God “ is therefore generously pleased to allow a middle “ state, where they may be purified by a certain “ degree of suffering.’ With those who profess
 “ this doctrine, does not your own opinion accord?
 “ And what is this, but the very doctrine of the “ Roman Catholic church respecting purgatory?

“ As to prayers for the dead, the council of “ Trent* has decreed, ‘ that there is a Purgatory,
 “ and that the souls detained in it are helped by “ the suffrages of the faithful.’

“ The nature and extent of these suffrages are “ thus explained by St. Augustine: † ‘ When the “ sacrifice of the altar, or alms, are offered for the “ dead, then, in regard to those whose lives were “ very good, such sacrifices may be deemed acts of “ thanksgiving. In regard to the imperfect, they “ may be deemed acts of propitiation; and though “ they bring no aid to the very bad, they may give “ some comfort to the living.’

“ Tradition in favour of the Catholic doctrine
 “ of Purgatory is so strong, that Calvin confesses “ explicitly, that ‘ during 1,300 years before his

Dr. Phillpotts's Comment (p. 146,) upon this Passage. His Citation from Calvin, of the Passage to which it refers.

HE quotes a passage from Bishop Fisher;—then says, “ Choose between him and Dr. Milner, whether you will seek for your church such advantages only, as can be obtained by fair and manly argument, or will prefer the specious, but in the end, the ruinous course of aiming at a little temporary triumph, by the artifices of the sophist, or the calumniator. At present, I am sorry to say, (while I wish to acquit you of calumny), that in sophistry you are too apt and forward a pupil of your great master (Dr. Milner). Hence it is, that you have ventured to eke out your meagre section on the question before us, with the following miserable attempt to mislead your readers. ‘ Tradition in favour of the Catholic doctrine of Purgatory is so strong, that Calvin confesses explicitly, that during 1,300

“ years before his time (1,600 before ours), it had “ been the practice to pray for the dead, in the “ hope of procuring them relief.’ You have not “ thought fit to give any reference to the particular “ work of Calvin, from which you make this “ notable quotation, though you require of us to “ mention always the work, the edition of it, and “ the page in which it is contained. * Left there“ fore, as we are, to hunt for the passage through “ nine ponderous folios, I am so illiberal as to “ precise form in which you exhibit it; or, if it “ exists, that it would be found in company, which “ you would be very sorry it should be seen to “ keep. Permit me to ask, Sir, whether you ever “ read what Calvin has really written on this point?

“ gation to me for informing you, in that writer’s “ own words, what he thought and taught on—

† “ Nemesis,” says Doctor Johnson, in his Life of Milton, “ is always “ on the watch.” In the present instance Doctor Phillpotts leaves me to hunt for this passage “ in nine ponderous volumes of Calvin’s works,” in the same manner as he taunts me for having left him to hunt among them for the passage which I had cited.

“ impieties, against which our warfare is directed,
“ were but recently either first called into existence,
“ or at least, carried to their present magnitude.
“ Against your whole proud system, to take it by “ storm, to trample it to the earth, to scatter it to “ the winds, we are armed not only with the “ strength of the Divine Word, but also with the “ authority of the Holy Fathers.’ ”

“ This, Sir, is an account of the tradition re“ specting Purgatory, given by Calvin, ‘ that “ ‘ Blasphemer Calvin,’ as he is called by the “ meek and holy Dr. Milner. Avail yourself of “ it if you can.”

“ We have thus seen the doctrine of your church “ respecting Confession and Absolution. You, in “ this instance (as I have been sorry to find in dif“ ferent degrees is almost invariably your practice),
“ have contrived to evade the whole of the real “ question at issue between the two churches, and “ have affected to perceive no difference between “ them. For this purpose you cite a passage from “ Dr. Milner’s End of Controversy, and another
“ from Chillingworth, which do not at all touch on “ the points of difference. Consult your own heart, “ Sir, and let that tell you, whether you have not “ here deeply, I had almost said, shamefully pre-“ varicated. You know that Auricular Confession “ is with you an essential part of a sacrament,
“ which, as you value your soul’s salvation, you “ must perform. You also know, that with us the “ same confession is not at all required as a ne-“ necessary service, not as a part of repentance, not “ even of discipline—that it is merely a matter “ recommended to those sinners whose troubled “ consciences admit not of being quieted by “ self-examination, however close and searching,

 “ nor any other instruction, however diligent,
 “ that he only who, ‘ requireth further comfort
 “ ‘ or counsel,’ after all that he can do for him“ self, is invited to repair to some discreet and “ learned minister of God’s word, and open his “ grief, that by the ministry of God’s holy word
 “ he may receive the benefit of absolution, together
 “ with ghostly counsel and advice, to the quieting
 “ of his conscience, and avoiding of all scruple and “ doubtfulness.”

Transcriptions from Calvin’s Institutions, and Translations of them.

IF the accuracy of my citation from Calvin had rested upon the language in which it is cited by Dr. Phillpotts, I believe every candid reader would have thought that I deserved no harsh words for citing it to prove my assertion.

But, how much of the passage which I had in view, and which Dr. Phillpotts had under his eyes, is concealed by him. 1. He omits the two first sentences, which fully and incontrovertibly prove the accuracy of my assertion—“ At vetustissima “ fuet ecclesia observatio. Hanc objectionem solvit “ Paulus, dum suam quoque ætatem in eâ sententiâ “ comprehendit, ubi denuntiat jacturam operis sui

“ facere oportere omnes, qui in ecclesiæ structurâ, “ aliquid fundamento minus consentaneum po“ suerit.” “ Our opponents will reply, that it has “ been A VERY ANCIENT opinion in the church.
 “ Paul removes this objection, when, he compre- “ hends even his own age in this sentence, where “ he denounces that all must suffer the loss of their “ work, who, in the structure of the church, should “ place any thing not corresponding to the founda- “ tion.” Surely Calvin’s answer, while it contro-verts the propriety, admits explicitly the antiquity of the practice. Calvin allows that it was a very ancient practice, but asserts that it was contrary to the word of God. Now, I have not cited him for asserting its conformity to the holy word;
 I have only cited him for admitting its antiquity.
 This he unequivocally allows; and his allowance of it is so clear, that the editor of his work (perhaps himself), thus abridges the passage in the margin:—
 “ Vetusta quidem est hæc opinio, quam vetustior “ Apostolus refellit.” “ In fact, it is an ancient “ opinion, but a more ancient Apostle refutes it.”

2.—Then follows the passage which Dr. Phillpotts has cited:—“ Quum ergo mihi objiciunt “ adversarii ante mille et trecentos annos usu “ receptum fuisse, ut preces fierent pro de- “ functis, eos vicissim interrogo quo dei verbo, &c.
 “ factum sit.” “ When our adversaries therefore “ object to me, that, to offer prayers for the dead,
 “ has been the practice of more than 1,300 years,
 “ I inquire of them, on the contrary, by what

“ word of God, &c. it is sanctioned.” Here the antiquity of the practice, at the distant period of 1,300 years, is expressed ; it is not controverted by Calvin. He confines his objection, as before, to its propriety.

3.—Then follows another important admission, which Dr. Phillpotts wholly omits :—“ Ipsi etiam veteres qui preces fundebant pro mortuis, et mandato Dei et legitimo exemplo hic se destitui videbant. Cur ergo audebant? In eo, dico aliquid humani passos esse ideoque in imitationem trabendum non esse contendo, quod fecerunt: Fuit etiam instar facis recepta consuetudo.” “ Even the FATHERS themselves, who offered up prayers for the dead, saw that they had neither a Divine command nor a legitimate example to justify the practice. Why then did they presume to adopt it? In this, I say, they discover themselves to be but men; and therefore I contend, that what they did ought not to be enforced on the imitation of others. The custom also, when received, was like a flame, kindling ardour in the minds of multitudes.”

4.—In the same spirit Calvin writes in the following passage,—also omitted by Dr. Phillpotts : “ Abrepti etiam ipsi fateor in errorem fuerunt, nempe ut inconsiderata credulitas privare iudicio solet hominum mentis.” “ I confess they were also involved in error themselves, from an inconsiderate credulity, which frequently deprives the human mind of judgment.”

5.—Afterwards follows the passage cited by Doctor Phillpotts:—“Cæterum ut concedam vetustis ecclesiæ scriptoribus pium esse visum suffragari pro mortuis!” But, though I concede that the antient writers of the church esteemed it a pious act to pray for the dead,” &c. ; the other passage also cited by him follows.

The foregoing citations are copied from the edition of the “Institutiones,” published at Amsterdam in 1677. L. 3. c. 5. sect. 10. In the version of the passages which I have cited, I have availed myself of Mr. Allen’s translation of them, in 3 vols. 8vo. 1813.

I. 4.

The Result.

ALL the passages are now before you and my other readers. The question to be decided is, whether my assertion, that “Calvin confesses explicitly that, during 1,300 years before his time, (1,600 before ours), it had been the practice to pray for the dead, in the hope of procuring them relief,” is proved. I aver, that the passages cited prove it beyond controversy. Calvin reprobates the doctrine. Then mentions its being objected to him, that it is “a very ancient practice.” “That it had been in use before 1,300 years antecedent to his time.” He does not deny the fact; but contends that the practice, however ancient, was contrary to the word of God; and thus, though ancient, was unjustifiable.

I never said or hinted, that Calvin was favourable to the doctrine of Purgatory; his reprobation of it is unquestionable I said, and I now triumphantly repeat, that Calvin allowed the antiquity of the practice of prayers for the dead; or, to repeat the words, in “the Book of the Roman Catholic Church,” “that, during 1,300 years before his time, (1,600 years before ours), it had been the practice to pray for the dead, in the hope of procuring them relief.”—Read again all that he concedes.

II. 1.

I now proceed to the passage in “The Book of the Roman Catholic Church,” respecting Sacramental Absolution, which is criminated by Dr. Phillpotts.

I shall first transcribe all that is said on this subject in “The Book of the Roman Catholic Church.”

Addressing myself to Dr. Southey, I there thus express myself:—“In respect to the Auricular Confession, I hope you will be convinced, that it does not deserve a bitter word, when you have perused the following testimonies in its favour:

“The Lutheran,” says Dr. Milner, in his End of Controversy, “who are the elder branch of the Reformation, in their confession of faith, and apology for that confession, expressly teach, that absolution is no less a sacrament than baptism, and the Lord’s supper; that, particular absolution is to be retained in confession; that, to reject it, is the error of the Novatian heretics; and that, by the power of the keys, (Matth. xvi. 9), sins are remitted, not only in the sight of the church, but also in the sight of God.* Luther himself, in his catechism, required that the penitent, in “ confession, should expressly declare, that he be“ lieves the forgiveness of the priest to be the for“ giveness of God.* What can Bishop Porteus,

 “ and other modern Protestants, say to all this,
 “ except that Luther and his disciples were infected
 “ with Popery? Let us then proceed to inquire “ into the doctrine of the most distinguished heads.
 “ In the order of the communion, composed by “ Cranmer, and published by Edward VI. the “ other things, ‘ If there be any of You, whose

 “ that soon after James I. became, at the same “ time, the member and the head of the English “ Church, he desired his prelates to inform him, in “ the conference at Hampton Court, what autho“ rity this church claimed in the article of abso“ lution from sin. When Archbishop Whitgift “ began to entertain him with an account of the “ general confession and absolution, in the com“ munion service, with which the King not being “ satisfied, Bancroft, at that time Bishop of London, “ fell on his knees, and said, it becomes us to deal “ plainly with Your Majesty. There is also in the “ book, a more particular and personal absolution

Thus far Dr. Milner :—The Book of the Roman Catholic Church, then proceeds immediately,—and without any comment,—as follows :—

“ I beg leave to add the words of the ‘ immortal Chillingworth,’ for by this epithet, he is frequently distinguished by Your writers.”

“ Can any man be so unreasonable as to imagine, that when our Saviour in so solemn a manner,— having first breathed upon his disciples, thereby conveying and insinuating the Holy Ghost into their hearts,—renewed unto them, or rather confirmed that glorious commission, &c. whereby he delegated to them an authority of binding and loosing sins upon earth, &c. Can any one think, I say, so unworthily of our Saviour, as to esteem these words of his for no better than compliment? Therefore, in obedience to his gracious will, and as I am warranted and enjoined by my holy mother, the Church of England, I beseech you, that, by your practice and use, you will not suffer that commission, which Christ hath given to his ministers, to be a vain form of words, without any sense under them. When you find yourselves charged and oppressed, &c. have recourse to your spiritual physician, and freely disclose the nature and malignancy of your disease, &c. and come not to him only with such

“ To these testimonies,” (I thus say, in the “ Book of the Church,” continuing my address to Doctor Southey),—“ which should have so much “ weight with you,—I shall only add the same ob-

III. 3.

The Result.

I HAVE thus stated the whole of the passage, in “The Book of the Roman Catholic Church,” which is the subject of the present discussion, and have copied, in his own words, the language which Dr. Phillpotts addresses to me upon it.

Are not you—are not all my readers quite satisfied, that I have not deserved the language which Doctor Phillpotts has applied to me? How can it be said, that “I evade the question at issue between the two churches?” Was this question proposed to me?—Did I profess to discuss any question? Did I mention, did I refer to any? Can I be said “to have affected to perceive no difference between them?” I neither said, nor insinuated, that there is no difference between them. I never said that the difference between them was slight: I said nothing about difference. I know it to be great.—All I say in “The Book of the Roman Catholic Church,”—all I insinuate in it, is, “a hope, that Doctor Southey would be convinced that Auricular Confession, as practised in the Church of Rome, does not deserve a bitter word, when he should have perused the following testimonies produced by me.” I then produce a passage from Doctor Milner’s “End of Controversy;” another, from Dr. Chillingworth. Then, without a single observation, after half a dozen lines, which mention the practice of Auricular Confession in the Oriental churches, I leave the subject altogether.

“Consult,” these are Doctor Philpotts own words, “consult your own heart, and let that tell you, whether you have not deeply, I had almost said shamefully prevaricated.”—I ask, in what? “You know,” says the Doctor, “that Auricular Confession is with you an essential part of a sacrament, which, as you value your soul’s salvation, you must perform.” This I certainly did, and do know. Have I said, have I insinuated the contrary?—“You also know,” continues Dr. Phillpotts, “that with us, it is not at all required, as a necessary service; not a part of repentance, not even of discipline; that it is merely recommended to those, whose troubled consciences admit not of being quieted by self-examination, however close and searching.” Without acquiescing in the accuracy of this representation of the doctrine of the Church of England on the point in question; or inquiring, whether it be reconcilable with the passage just before cited by me from Doctor Chillingworth, I accept Doctor Phillpotts statement,—I admit myself to have known all the Doctor says I knew.

But, how can all this justify Doctor Philpotts’s charging upon me the foul crime of “deep and shameful prevarication.” Prevarication, Doctor Phillpotts well knows, is separated by a very thin line, from the crime described by the unutterable monosyllable. I ask,—not, if it be just to impute it to me:—but, if it be possible to frame such a charge upon my words?—Have I said, have

I insinuated, that the doctrines of the churches are the same? Have I affected to perceive no difference between them? Have I said any thing respecting their difference? Nothing like it.—All I have said is, that “I hoped that Doctor Southey, after perusing the passages I was about to cite, would not think our doctrine on the subject deserving “a bitter word.” In this I may have been mistaken. After perusing these passages, Dr. Southey may think—he may even be right in thinking, that Auricular Confession, as practised in the Church of Rome, does deserve a bitter word: Still, where can prevarication be found?

Such is the charge which Doctor Phillpotts has brought against me;—such the language in which he conveys it;—and such its truth.

III.

CHARGE BROUGHT BY DOCTOR PHILLPOTTS, ON MR. BUTLER'S HAVING ALLOWED, IN A FORMER PUBLICATION, THE DOMINIUM ALTUM OF THE POPE.—REPLY TO THE CHARGE.

I SHOULD not detain your attention to Doctor Phillpotts's publication any longer, if he had not, towards the conclusion of it, brought, or rather insinuated against me, a charge, which seems to call in question the sincerity with which I have taken the oaths of allegiance, prescribed by the 18th and 31st of his late Majesty, to his Roman Catholic subjects; and which may be thought to implicate the general body of the Roman Catholics in the accusation. I shall state the charge in his own words.

III. 1.

The Charge.

“ IN the year 1800, the late Pope Pius VII. addressed his late Most Christian Majesty, the eldest son of the church, Louis XVIII. as lawful King of France and successor of St. Lewis, and made to him, as such, the usual communication of the intelligence of his election to the Popedom. In the following year, on April 10th, 1801, the same Pope entered into a concordat with Buonaparte, which instrument, besides suppressing 146 episcopal and metropolitan sees, and dismissing their bishops and metropolitans without any form of judicature, absolves all Frenchmen from their oaths of allegiance to their legitimate sovereign, Louis XVIII. and authorizes an oath of allegiance to the First Consul. The Pope’s words are, ‘Consensimus, ut episcopi antequam episcopale munus suscipiant coram Primo Consuli juramentum fidelitatis emittant.’ “Consensimus ut parochi,” &c. &c.

“ In reference to this affair, a book was printed in London, in the year 1807, with the name of a most respectable gentleman of your church in the title-page, from which you will permit me to present my readers with the following most instructive passage:—‘The ecclesiastical division of France by the Pope and Buonaparte, has

“ not been acquiesced in by some of the Gallican “ prelates : they appear much perplexed between “ allegiance to the Bourbons, and duty to the Pope.
 “ They invoke the canons ;’ and their appeal to “ the canons must be decided in their favour,
 “ if the case should be tried by the ordinary rules
 “ of the ecclesiastical polity of the Roman Catholic “ church. But at the time we speak of, no sen- “ tence, founded on those rules, could be carried “ into execution. Such was the extraordinary “ state of things, that nothing short of the “ DOMINUM ALTUM, or the right of providing “ for extraordinary cases by extraordinary cases
 “ of authority, could be exerted with effect ; and
 “ that DOMINUM ALTUM the venerable prelates “ cannot, consistently with their own principles, “ deny to the successors of St. Peter.

“ I have called this a most instructive passage,
 “ and some of my readers will probably agree with “ me in so considering it. It tells us of a new secu“ rity for our existing institutions in church and “ state (as far as the Pope can endanger them), if
 “ the proposed bills should pass : it is this, that no “ harm shall be done to them, no exertion of the “ DOMINUM ALTUM, if—no extraordinary case “ shall arise, which may require to be provided for
 “ by an extraordinary act of authority.

“ Having thus stated the obligation we owe to “ this writer, I will no longer withhold his name
 “ from the grateful commemoration of my fellow “ Protestants, it is ‘ CHARLES BUTLER, OF

“ LINCOLN’S-INN, ESQUIRE,* who with becoming modesty, wishes at present to be chiefly known, as author of ‘ the Book of the Roman Catholic Church ;’ a book at which I am now going to take, (I rejoice to say), one parting glance.”

III. 2.

The Reply.

WORDS cannot express a stronger disbelief of the right of the Popes to temporal power, direct or indirect, or a stronger detestation of their claim to it, than I have repeatedly expressed in the work cited by Doctor Phillpotts. In the 31st page, he will find, that, after observing that some Popes had taken upon themselves to try, condemn and depose sovereigns, to absolve their subjects from allegiance to them, and to grant their kingdoms to others, I add these words: “ That a claim so unfounded and impious, so detrimental to religion, so hostile to the peace of the world, and apparently, so extravagant and visionary, should have been made, is strange ; stranger still is the success it met with.”

In page 159, I mention some circumstances, which, for a time, preserved to the Popes their temporal power in the states that acknowledged their spiritual supremacy.” I proceed to observe, “ Butler’s Works, Vol. II, p. 13. Proofs and Illustrations. Revolutions of the Germanic Empire, London, 1807. I readily admit, that there are in the same work several strong passages against the Pope’s temporal power.”—Why did not Doctor Phillpotts do me the justice,—for this justice was due to me,—to copy them?

that “ the influence which this gave them, made “ them venture on those enormities, which now “ excite so much astonishment, the bulls by which “ they absolved the subjects of Henry IV. of “ France and our Elizabeth, from their allegiance,
 “ their approbation of the massacre of St. Bartho“ lomew, their concurrence in the league, their “ blessing of the Armada,” &c.

In page 161, I expressly intimate my opinion, that the distinction between the Pope’s direct and indirect power in temporals is merely verbal. Finally, in page 163, I give an explicit opinion, that “ the claim of the Pope to temporal power, is one “ of the greatest misfortunes that have befallen “ Christianity.”

With these passages before him, it is a matter of astonishment to me, that Dr. Phillpotts should charge me with ascribing to the Pope, a power of transferring allegiance, or any thing which resembles it. I certainly think, that, in extraordinary cases of a spiritual nature, and for the spiritual advantage of the people, the Pope may make spiritual arrangements of the spiritual concerns of the church, though contrary to its established canons. This is all that is expressed, or can decently be inferred, from the passage referred to by Doctor Phillpotts.

Upon this subject I shall only add, that the objections of the Irish prelates, Dr. Milner, or Mr. Plowden, to the Gallican declaration of 1682, which are referred to by Dr. Phillpotts, did not relate to the first of the four articles of which the declaration is comprized. This declares the independence of the temporal on the spiritual power of the Popes. The objections related only to the three remaining articles ; these regard the discipline of the church in spiritual concerns ; with these the temporal powers have no right of interference ; this has been repeatedly explained.

IT is remarkable, that although Dr. Isaacson explicitly adopts Dr. Middleton's opinion, against the continuation of miracles, after the apostolic age, he yet cites,* without any animadversion, from Fuller's Life of their Common Hero, the miraculous warnings of death, given by the Almighty to Bishop Jewell, Bishop Ridley, and to Cyprian and Bradford, the Marian Martyrs. Ridley was certainly guilty of high treason to Queen Mary, his lawful sovereign. "Dr. Ridley," says Stow, (annum 1553), "vehemently persuaded the people " on the title of the Lady Jane, and inveighed " earnestly against the title of Lady Mary." Is it recorded in history, that the Almighty favoured any other person, guilty of high treason, with a supernatural communication?

I am sorry that the respectable writer of this work finds any thing to reprehend in my pages; I trust he will find nothing that displeases him in the following brief defence of some of them against his charges.

1. The principal and most important of them relates to what I have said of Archbishop Cranmer. Without a minute and full investigation of every topic which it presents for discussion, it would be impossible to decide with justice between us. In such an investigation I may hereafter engage; at present I can only generally express my acquiescence in what Doctor Lingard has said in the preface to the last volume of his excellent history: "that the attempt of Mr. Todd to place in a more favourable light the labours of this celebrated prelate, has not been successful."

I have no hostile feeling to the Archbishop's memory. In my history of the English, Irish, and Scottish Roman Catholics,* I have mentioned with praise, "this prelate's protection of the Princess Mary from the fury of her father,—his endeavours to save Sir Thomas More, Bishop Fisher and Cromwell,—his resistance to the passing of the sanguinary enactment of the Six Articles, and his encouragement of letters “and learned men.” In my Life of Erasmus recently published, I took care to notice the archbishop’s liberality to him. Having presented my Historical Memoirs to Doctor Parr, I received from him a letter, in which he censures, in the severest terms, my language upon, what I consider the blameable parts of the archbishop’s character. The whole of this vituperation I inserted in my Reminiscences.* In a note to it,† I thus express myself:—“If a new edition of the Historical “Memoirs shall be called for, the Reminiscent “will reconsider, with the attention due to all “that falls from Doctor Parr, what is said on the “unfortunate and wickedly treated prelate. In the “mean time, he wishes both his descendants and “the members of the church of which that prelate

 “was a distinguished founder, to be in possession “of the spirited, elegant, and amiable extenuation,
 “of what may be thought vulnerable in that “prelate’s character.”

I conclude my account of him in the Historical Memoirs,‡ with these words:—“The sentence, “which, after he had been pardoned for his treason, “condemned him to the flames for heresy, was “execrable. His firmness under the torture to which “it consigned him, has seldom been surpassed
 “It presents an imposing spectacle, and we then “willingly forget what history records against him.
 “But, when we read in the Biographia Britannica,

“ that ‘ he was the glory of the English nation,
 “ and the ornament of the Reformation,’ his mis“ deeds rush on our recollection, we are astonished “ at the effect of party, and the intrepidity of the “ biographer.”

2. Mr. Todd asserts, that I charitably say,
 “ that Cranmer and his associates wished Mary
 “ and her associates to be exposed to their pro“ jected persecution.”* I am surprised at this remark. Would not Mary have been exposed to the Reformatio Legum Antiquarum, if it had been sanctioned by the legislature? Did not Cranmer and his associates wish, did they not exert themselves to their utmost to have it passed into a law?
 Does not Strype, as he is cited by Mr. Todd, describe it “ a very noble enterprise?” Does not Burnet, also cited by Mr. Todd, describe it “ a “ noble design, so near being perfected in Edward’s “ time?”

I believe Cranmer to have been a learned man;
 naturally kind, and disposed to moderate councils:
 but that, unfortunately for him, he was born in times, to which his virtue was very unequal;—
 I believe that this is the opinion, which all well informed and moderate Protestants entertain of him.

3.—Mr. Todd (p. 24) accuses me of “ unfairly “ citing Bishop Jeremy Taylor, on the subject of “ Transubstantiation, and the Mass.” He refers to “ The Book of the Roman Catholic Church,”
 (p. 327), and to my “ Enquiry as to the Declaration

* Mr. Todd’s Critical Introduction, pp. 99, 100.

“ against Transubstantiation, &c. published separately in 1822, and copied into the 18th chapter of the Book of the Roman Catholic Church.”

My object in the Enquiry, was to show that the Oath and Declaration against Transubstantiation, prescribed by the 30th Charles II, as a qualification for sitting and voting in parliament, could not be conscientiously made or taken by a Protestant. I suggested the negative: I assign for it, as one reason, that the person, who makes the declaration and takes the oath, swears by it, that “ there is no transubstantiation, and that the sacrifice of the Mass is superstitious and idolatrous.” I observe, that no one can conscientiously affirm any thing upon oath, unless he has previously ascertained by due inquiry, the truth of the affirmation. I proceed to state, that the superstition and idolatry charged upon the Catholics by the declaration and oath, must be in a certain degree problematical, as it has been doubted by many eminent Protestants. For this I quote Doctor Jeremy Taylor, Mr. Thorndyke, Bishop Cosin, and Bishop Kenn, and transcribe the passages.

To that which is cited from Doctor Taylor, Mr. Todd opposes a passage from the same author’s “ Dissuasive from Popery,” which he says, asserts the contrary.*

He observes, that the “ Liberty of Prophesying,” was written by Doctor Taylor in his younger years ; the “ Dissuasive from Popery ” in his mature age. But was this so ? The former was written by Doctor Taylor in his 34th, the latter in his 53d year. Is it settled, that a scholar, who like Doctor Taylor has lived in books from his infancy, writes better at 53 than at 37.

* He cites, Chapter II. Section XII. In Mr. Heber’s edition of the prelate’s works, it is to be found in Section XI.

However this may be, after repeated serious perusal of the passage cited by Mr. Todd from Dr. Taylor’s “ Dissuasive from Popery,” I am convinced that it does not substantially contradict the passage cited from his “ Liberty of Prophesying.” I admit that it appears,—that it may be thought,—that it may be construed to contradict it : that it sounds like,—that it approaches very near to a contradiction ; but I aver, that it is not a contradiction. The fact evidently is, that for some reason, Doctor Taylor wished to be thought to contradict the doctrine expressed in the “ Liberty of Prophesying ;” and that for some other reason, he wished not to do it explicitly, and therefore adopted middle expressions.

If I had been aware of the passage cited from the “ Dissuasive from Popery,”—which I assure Mr. Todd I was not,—I should not have inserted the passage from the “ Prophesyings ;” for although I think the former is not affected by the latter, I think the latter renders the sense of the former debateable. I shall only add, that those who discuss the point, should read the whole passage in “ The Dissuasive,” and judge from the whole ; and should also bear steadily in mind, that the question is not, whether the doctrine be true, or what was Doctor Taylor's opinion upon it ; but whether Doctor Taylor thought the Catholics, with their notions of the real presence, could, with justice, be deemed idolaters, for their doctrine of transubstantiation and the Mass.*

4.—Mr. Todd, (p. 26), by a very harmless, and I am sure, a very honourable mistake, charges me with citing Bishop Gunning, “ for the same doctrine,—concealing what should be added respecting him, that after the bill was passed, he took the oath.” Mr. Todd refers to the “ Book of the Catholic Church,” (p. 327). I have more than once perused this page,—some pages immediately preceding, and some immediately following it,—and the article “ Transubstantiation,” in both editions of the “ Book of the Roman Catholic Church,” and can find in them no citation from Bishop Gunning; or even any mention of that prelate's name.

* I have been blamed for saying, in the “ Book of the Roman Catholic Church,” that the oath declares transubstantiation to be idolatrous, when it only declares this of “ the Mass.” But is not transubstantiation the very essence of the Mass?

I avail myself of this opportunity to mention what I should have noticed before, that Doctor Phillpotts has filled his work with pretty stories of the saints in heaven, and souls in purgatory. Not one of these do I believe. Some, he says, are related in the Roman breviary. The parts of Scripture, and decrees of general councils, inserted in the Roman breviary, are of faith: the rest is matter of history, and entitled to historical credit, and to nothing beyond it. In the diocese of Paris, and most other dioceses in France, the Roman breviary has been superseded, and another substituted. All Catholics agree, that the Roman breviary wants reform.

XIII.

It remains for me to mention, that “ The Book of the Roman Catholic Church,” has been a subject of regular criticism in THE BRITISH CRITIC,—BRITISH REVIEW,—BLACKWOOD’S EDINBURGH MAGAZINE,—THE CHRISTIAN OBSERVER,—QUARTERLY REVIEW,—QUARTERLY THEOLOGICAL REVIEW,—WESTMINSTER REVIEW, and probably in some journals which I have not seen.

The last Quarterly Review informs the public that Dr. Southey is arming, and intimates that Dr. Phillpotts, the Rev. Mr. Townsend, and the rest have left him nothing to reply to. Such, I cannot think, is the general opinion.

At length I close my letter ; Doctor Phillpotts closes that, which he has addressed to me, by bidding me—“ Good night :”—To you, to him, and to all my other critics, I present the same wish, —and permit me to do it in the words of the priest, at Complin.—

Noctem quietam, et finem perfectam,
Concedat nobis Dominus omnipotens !

With the greatest respect, I have the honour to be,

Your most obedient,
and most obliged humble servant,

CHARLES BUTLER.

LETTERS

TO

THE REV. GEORGE TOWNSEND,

IN REPLY

TO

“ His Accusations of History against the Church of Rome.”

PRELIMINARY LETTER.

SIR,

YOUR “ Accusations of History against the Church of Rome,” in a series of Letters addressed to me, are highly injurious to the Roman Catholic religion. As my “ Book of the Roman Catholic Church ” occasioned your publication, I feel myself called upon to answer it.

In every part of it you call us “ Romanists.” When this word is used to denote our religious communion with the see of Rome, we do not object to it: when it is used to impute to us any political or civil adherence or subserviency to that see, we think it slanderous : when it is used with a sneer, it evidently is an intentional affront.

As several acts of the Legislature style us, and permit us to style ourselves, " Roman Catholics," and this is our favourite appellation ; we trust gentlemen will always give it us. Whatever tends to prevent or soften the asperities of controversy, a true Christian is always ready to adopt.

Before I proceed to my reply, I must observe, that my " Historical Memoirs of the English, Irish, and Scottish Roman Catholics," should always be taken in conjunction with my " Book of the Roman Catholic Church." It could not be expected that I should re-write " the Memoirs " in " the Book." I continually refer in it to them : and was much pleased to find that they always were under Your eye when You were employed upon Your publication.

I.

Your assertion, that a decree of the Council of Constance, which an article of the creed of Pope Pius IV. compels every conscientious Romanist to adopt, sanctions the doctrine that faith is not to be kept with heretics.

IN your preliminary letter, (page 17), you cite the last article but one of the creed of Pope Pius IV, in which the subscriber of it " professes to receive " all things defined and declared by the sacred " canons and general councils, particularly by the " Council of Trent."

You then cite the decree of the 19th session of the Council of Constance, which declares, that “ safe “ conducts granted to heretics, by a secular prince, “ shall not prevent any ecclesiastical judge from “ punishing such heretics, even if they come to the “ place of judgment, relying on such safeguard,

 “ and would not otherwise come thither.”

You assert, that “ this decree, which the creed
 “ of Pope Pius IV compels every conscientious
 “ Romanist to adopt, sanctions, as plainly as words
 “ can make it, the doctrine, which you truly say,
 “ ‘ I reject with abhorrence,’ and which the four “ foreign universities consulted by Mr. Pitt’s direc“ tion, likewise rejected,—‘ that no faith is to be “ kept with heretics.’ ”

I answer, 1st,—That all persons, who are acquainted with the jurisprudence of the times in which the council was held, must be sensible, that the canon only intimates, that, when any prince grants a safe conduct, which conflicts with the faith or morals of the church of Christ, or with the legal or constitutional rights of the church of any state, he has exceeded his legitimate authority, and that this exercise of his power is consequently null. Such certainly is the doctrine of every Protestant church, episcopal or arian. If, before the late act for the relief of the Anti-Trinitarians, a person had published, within any part of the united empire of Great Britain and Ireland, a work against the Trinity, and been prosecuted for it, and then had fled the country, and made some place beyond the seas his residence ; and his Majesty had granted him a safe conduct to any part of his cismarine dominions; this safe conduct would not have protected the offender against the process: the judge would not even have allowed it to be pleaded.

I answer, 2dly,—That the council directs that “the safeguard ought not to prevent any ecclesiastical judge from punishing such heretics.” Now an ecclesiastical judge, can, as such, punish only by ecclesiastical censures. No safeguard can prevent an ecclesiastical court from punishing a delinquent by these. This is the acknowledged doctrine, of the Roman Catholic, the Anglican, the Lutheran, and the Calvinian churches.

Thus, the question of the lawfulness of breaking faith with heretics does not arise upon this decree. If the Council of Constance had decreed it to be lawful, it would have covered itself with indelible infamy.

I beg leave to add, that having, in every stage of my long life, lived in habits of intimacy or acquaintance with all descriptions of Roman Catholics,—the young, the old, the literate, the illiterate, natives of this country, foreigners, ecclesiastic and secular, I have never known one, who did not treat the charge of our holding it lawful to break faith with heretics with indignation, and consider it as an execrable calumny. You know the indignation with which the foreign universities express themselves upon it.

II.

Your insinuation, that the Author of "the Book of the Roman Catholic Church" deserves a harsh name, for intimating, knowing it to be otherwise, that Romanism is founded on Scripture.

IN page 19, You express yourself in the following words:—" Pardon me, if I inquire whether some part of your third section of the Introduction, (page 9), does not deserve a harsh name. " You believe the doctrines of your church to be " unchangeable: your faith is now what it has " ever been; but this proposition, you observe, is " confined to the articles of your faith, and no " doctrine is of faith unless it be delivered by " revelation, and is proposed as such by your " church. You resolve, therefore, all the decisions of councils, and all the dogmas of faith, " into the authority of Scripture, or you otherwise " reject them as doctrines of your faith. If this " be your meaning, receive my congratulations; if " not, we must look to the formulary of Pope " Pius and the Council of Trent. You, no doubt, " wish to persuade yourself and us, that Romanism " is founded on Scripture." If I rightly understand the charge expressed, or rather insinuated by You in this passage, it is, that I wished the reader to believe, although I knew the contrary, that the Roman Catholics hold no article to be of faith, if it be not contained in the Scriptures.

If this be your meaning, and You intimate that the passage which You cited from my work, deserves, on this account, a harsh name, I must say, that you entirely misapprehend my words, and are wholly ignorant of the Roman Catholic doctrine upon tradition.

The Roman Catholics believe, that both the articles of faith recorded in the Scriptures, and the articles of faith transmitted to them by tradition, were delivered by the revelation of Christ to his church, while he dwelt among men.

Nothing, as far as we know, of the doctrine revealed by Christ, was committed to writing during his life. Thus, while he lived, and during many years after his death, all the doctrines which he taught, were divine traditions. Portions of the doctrine thus orally revealed by Christ, were recorded successively, and by portions, in the Gospels and Apostolical Epistles. Roman Catholics believe, that the whole of the doctrine revealed and taught by Christ, was not so recorded; but that the memory of some portion of it, derived originally from the revelations of Christ, was left to remain upon tradition. Thus, to make any doctrine an article of the faith of the church, it must have been revealed by Christ in his life-time. To ascertain, for the security of the faithful, that what the church proposes to them for their belief, was thus revealed by Christ, it is required that this should be declared by the church. Hence, to constitute an article of faith, it is, in our opinion, essential; first, that it should have been revealed by Christ; secondly, that it should have been transmitted either by the Scriptures or uninterrupted traditions; and thirdly, that the church should propound that it was thus revealed, and has been thus transmitted.

After this explanation of the doctrine of the church upon this head, I call upon you to declare, whether there be the slightest ground for insinuating that I wished to induce my readers, by an ambiguous expression, to believe what I knew to be untrue, and deserved, on this or any other account, a harsh name, for what I have said in in the passage, you have thought proper to criminate?

If I have mistaken your meaning, I beg you will excuse me; I have taken great pains to discover it.

III.

Your assertions respecting Bossuet's "Exposition of Faith."

I AGREE with you that "the catechism of the Council of Trent, is the best exposition of the Roman Catholic creed." But, as I have observed in my introductory letter to Doctor Southey, a proper perusal of that document requires attentive study. I have, therefore, recommended to those who are unable to give it such a perusal, Bossuet's "Exposition of Faith," and the other works I have specified. You say, that "Bossuet's Exposition," contains only the sentiments of a pious "individual." Bossuet was certainly a pious individual, but he was much more. Eloquence, power of argument, and erudition, were united in him in so high a degree, as to render it very doubtful whether the Christian or Pagan world can produce even one person, in whom they have all been united in the same degree. Nor is the "Exposition of Faith" to be considered merely as the work of an individual. The formal approbation of the archbishops of Rheims and Tours, and the bishops of Châlons, Uséz, Meaux, Grénoble, Tulle, Auxerre, Tarbes, Bezières and Autun, are prefixed to it. Cardinal Bona, Cardinal Chigi, Hyacinthe Libelli, master of the sacred palace, also approved it. Pope Innocent XI sanctioned it by two briefs. The clergy of France, in their assembly of 1682, signified their approbation of it, and declared it to contain the doctrines of the Roman Catholic church. It has been translated into the language of every country, in which the Roman Catholic religion is either dominant or tolerated. Roman Catholics have but one opinion of it: all, without exception, acknowledge it to be a full and faultless exposition of the doctrines of their church.* I could not, therefore, have referred Protestants to a more authentic exposition of the Roman Catholic creed.

You tell me that Bishop Stillingfleet answered Mr. Gother's "Papist Misrepresented and Repre-

* Permit me to refer you to my Life of Bossuet, chap. VI, or rather to "Histoire de J. B. Bossuet, Evêque de Meaux, composé sur les manuscrits originaux, par M. L. B. de Bausset, ancien Evêque de Alais, vol. I. livre premier, sect. XXXIXe. M. De Bausset was afterwards raised to the archiepiscopal See of Toulouse, and honoured with the Roman purple."

sented:”—Mr. Gother triumphantly replied to Stillingfleet’s answer.

Doctor Challoner’s “Garden of the Soul” having been mentioned by me, as the most popular prayer book of the English Roman Catholics, you ask me, (p. 21), “Whether, if I am a father, a brother, or a husband, I would place in the hands of any woman, the contents of pages 213, 214,” meaning, I suppose, that part of the Examination of Conscience which contains the sins against the Sixth Commandment? If you ask, whether I should place those very pages in the hands of a woman; I answer, that such an act would be abominable. If you ask, whether I should place the book in her hands, and recommend it as an excellent manual of prayer; I answer, without hesitation, that I should. Notwithstanding the loves, and something worse than the loves of the patriarchs, the story of Judith, and the song of Solomon, You place the Bible in the hands of children and adults of each sex, and recommend it as an excellent book for their perusal. You trust that they will only read it in moments of seriousness, and pass over the noxious passages, when the perusal of them is improper:—We do the same.

IV.

Your assertion, that Arminianism, Calvinism, Quakerism and Socinianism, may be found in the writings of the Romanist divines.

AT the end of your letter, (p. 23), You inform me that, “You could have selected from the writings of the Romanist divines, nearly every doctrinal opinion which is advocated by the jarring sectaries of your church. “Arminianism,” you tell us, “was the doctrine of the Jesuits; Calvinism, of the Jansenists; Quakerism, of the Franciscans; Socinianism, in all its gradations, from Arianism to Belshamism, was taught by the authors enumerated in the Roma Racoviana.” Here, You do the Roman Catholic church, and her communities,—You even do the unhappy Jansenists,—great injustice. No Roman Catholic can advocate any of the jarring doctrines You mention, without incurring, in the opinion of their church, the guilt of heresy. The Jesuits are not Arminians, the Jansenists are not Calvinists,—(but what they are is of no consequence to the Catholic church, as she has rejected them from her communion);—nothing can be more unlike to another than the Franciscans are to the Quakers; and if any Roman Catholic held Socinian doctrines, in any of the gradations you mention, he would be thought, by all Roman Catholics, to have abandoned the Roman Catholic faith. Nothing, except Atheism, or Deism, is so much opposed to the Roman Catholic religion as Socinianism. The late Dr. Hey, the Norisian professor, instructing the English youth from a theological chair at Cambridge, could say, unblamed, “We and the Socinians are said to differ; but about what? not about morality or about natural religion. We differ only about what we do not understand, and about what is to be done on the “ part of God; and if we allowed one another to use expressions at will, (and what great matter could that be, in what might be called unmeaning expressions?) we need never be on our guard against each other.” Permit me, Sir, to assure you, that if in any part of Christendom, in which the Roman Catholic religion prevails, a professor had uttered these, or similar words, he would have been instantly expelled from his professor's chair; and no explanation, no retractation, no penance, would have restored him to it.

V.

Your assertion, that all the new orders of the Romanists appeal to Popery, and protest against the Scripture.

YOU then say to me (p. 23), “ the fanaticism of new sects among us, was the same with that of new orders among you; yet all these appeal to popery, and protest against the Scriptures.” Here, for want no-doubt of proper information, You do us an injustice, that cries to heaven. All the orders of the Church of Rome receive—all bow to the Scriptures—all would consider a protest against them to be blasphemy. Traditions contradictory of the Scriptures, or derogatory from them, are held by all Roman Catholics to be impieties.

LETTER I.

EXTENSIVE DIFFUSION OF CHRISTIANITY.

Your vindication and adoption of Doctor Southey's expression, that the Roman Catholic Religion is "a prodigious structure of imposture and wickedness."

I. 1.

IN my first letter to Doctor Southey, after describing the extent of the Roman Catholic religion, and observing that Doctor Southey, in the last line of his tenth chapter, describes it, "as a prodigious structure of imposture and wickedness;" I ask that gentleman, whether "it be decorous to apply this opprobrious language to a religion professed in such extensive territories, several of which are in the highest state of intellectual advancement, and abound, as Dr. Southey must acknowledge, with persons, from the very highest to the very lowest condition of life, of the greatest honour, endowments and worth?" I then inquire, if the religion of this large proportion of the Christian world really be, "this prodigious structure of imposture and wickedness," the gates of hell have not, contrary to the solemn promise of the Son of God, prevailed against this church?

To the first of these questions, you give no answer, and therefore your sentiments upon it can only be inferred from your own pages.

To the second, You reply, (p. 24), that “the promise of God has not failed, because his pure church is reduced to the smaller number.”

Permit me to suggest, that “smaller” is not, in this place, the proper word. You should have said “a number incalculably small.” For, what is the proportion of the Lutherans—the most numerous of all Protestant denomination of Christians,—compared to that of all other Christians? Is it not incalculably small? Has not the promise of God failed, if it has only been kept to this, or to any other incalculably small proportion of individuals?

To make the proportion of Christians such, as will save the promise, must not the Roman Catholics be taken into account? Then, can the Roman Catholic church be that “prodigious structure of imposture and wickedness,” described by Doctor Southey, and by You?

I. 2.

You intimate (p. 25), “that if the adherents to Rome are as numerous as I represent, your vigilance must be proportioned to your danger.”

If, by the words, “adherents to Rome,” you mean to describe the English, Irish and Scottish

Roman Catholics, as adhering in politics, or as having a political attachment or subserviency to the Roman see, You affix to them an opprobrious description which they do not deserve, and which they reject with scorn; and You offer to the whole body, and to every individual of which it is composed, a personal insult.

But, let me ask,—have the Protestant Powers on the Continent shown more attachment to England than the Roman Catholic? In Marlborough's wars, who adhered longest to the banners of England, the Austrians, or the Dutch? In the contest with America, which preserved their allegiance to their sovereign, the Catholic or the Protestant colonies? In the French revolution, which soonest deserted England, Austria and Spain, or Denmark, Sweden and Holland? Who was Great Britain's last and most honourable ally, through the whole of that tremendous contest? The Pope. Which party in France now most curses the success of the British arms at Waterloo? and most wishes the complete humiliation of the British nation? The Anti-Catholic.

LETTER II. & III.

THE ANGLO SAXONS.

II. & III. 1.

Identity of the doctrine preached to them, and the doctrine of the Council of Trent.

I HAVE asserted, as you justly observe (page 29), and I now confidently repeat the assertion, “ that “ the doctrines of the Church of Rome were the same
“ in the days of St. Augustine, when the Anglo- “ Saxons were converted, with those which are now
“ received as established by the Council of Trent.”

In opposition to this assertion, you produce from Bishop Stillingfleet, thirteen instances, in which they differ. I lament that I have not time to discuss them, as I think I could, with very little trouble, show, even to your satisfaction, that, in all the instances of a supposed disagreement between the two churches, which you produce from the works of that prelate, there is not even one, in which he does not misrepresent either the doctrine of the Anglo-Saxon church, or the doctrine of the Council of Trent, or both; or propound conclusions which his premises do not warrant.

To convince you that my assertion is founded, I beg leave to refer you to "The Protestant's Apology for the Roman Church, by John Brerely, priest," (Tractate I, section 1, p. 57.) He shows, beyond the possibility of disproof, that the most powerful adversaries of the Church of Rome have unequivocally acknowledged the identity of the Anglo-Saxon and Trentine doctrines, and reproached the memory of the Apostles of the Anglo-Saxons with this identity.

The adversary writers, who so describe it, "are not," says Mr. Brerely, "writers of vulgar note; but, such as are for learning most accomplished: as namely, Dr. Humfrey, Carion, Luke Osiander, the Century-writers of Magdeburgh, and others. These," he says, "describe the particulars of the religion as then taught and professed by St. Gregory and St. Augustine. They recite and affirm the said confessed particulars to be altars, vestments, images, chalices, crosses, candlesticks, censers, holy vessels, holy water, the sprinkling thereof, reliques, translations, and religious dedicating of churches to the bones and ashes of saints, consecration of altars, chalices and corporals, consecration of the fonte of baptism, chrism and oyle, consecration of churches with sprinkling of holy water, celebration of mass, the Archbishop's pall at solemn mass time, (Romanarum cæremoniarum codices), Romish mass bookes, (et onus cæremoniarum); a burden of ceremonies; also, free will, merit and indulgences; “purgatory, the unmarried life of priests, publique invocation of saints, and their worship, and the worshipping of images, exorcisms, pardons, vows, monachism, transubstantiation, prayer for the dead, offering the healthful host of Christ’s body and blood for the dead; the Roman Bishops claim for the exercise of jurisdiction, and primacy over both churches; and lastly, (reliquum-que Pontificiæ superstitionis chaos), even the whole chaos of a popish superstition.” Upon each of these heads, Mr. Brerely refers to the chapter and verse of the authors, whom he cites. His work being scarce, permit me to offer You the loan of it. I am confident, that if You seriously compare Dr. Stillingfleet with Mr. Brerely, You will find that the prelate, when put into the scales with Brerely, kicks the beam as rapidly as when he ventured into scales with Locke.

II. 2.

Miracles.

The remainder of your letter, contains several passages which I think reprehensible; but I shall confine myself to what You say in page 49, upon the subject of miracles.

You express yourself very inaccurately, when, in contrasting your church with ours, you say, “The Protestant may reject the opinions which reason or Scripture convince him are absurd. The Romanist is permitted to reject nothing which his church has once sanctioned.”

All opinions which the church sanctions, BY PROPOUNDING THEM TO HAVE BEEN REVEALED, we are bound to believe: All other opinions she leaves to our reason.

You say, “ we are compelled to assert the miraculous powers of our church.” This is true. “ We are therefore,” you tell us, “ compelled to allow that our most absurd legends may be true.” Here you are completely mistaken. We know and proclaim, that all absurd legends, are, and must be, untrue. “ You dare not,” say you, “ resign the miracles of the darkest age to their fate.” We dare, and we do resign them all to their fate. Did not Cardinal Bellarmine,* in the fifteenth century, profess general incredulity of the miracles related by Metaphrastes? Did not Lewis Vives,† in the sixteenth century, cry aloud, “ What a shame it is to the Christian world, that the acts of our martyrs have not been published with greater truth and sincerity?” Does not Dr. Milner ‡ admit, that “ a vast number of incredible and false miracles, as well as other fables, have been forged by some and believed by other Catholic writers, in every age of the church, not except even that of the Apostles?” Does he not reject, in the wholesale, “ the miracles related in the Golden Legend of Jacobus Voragine; those related in the Speculum of Vincentius Bellua-

* Cited by Bellarmine in the Preface to Acta Sanctorum.

‡ End of Controversy, Letter XXIV.

“ censis ? ” Does any Roman Catholic credit those which rest solely upon the credit of Surius or Mombritius ? Does not Doctor Lingard * reprobate the credulity of Osbert, the biographer of St. Dunstan ? Does he not admit that ‘ many of the Anglo Saxon miracles shrink from the severity of criticism.’

I desire you to read with attention, what I am now going to write.

I have mentioned, in my third letter to Doctor Southey, that no miracles, except those which are related in the Old or New Testament, are articles of faith ; that a person may disbelieve every other miracle ; and that he may even disbelieve the existence of the person by whom they are said to be wrought without ceasing to be a Catholic. Supposing a Protestant to present himself to a Roman Catholic priest,—to request that priest to receive him into the Roman Catholic church,—and the priest to find him well instructed and well disposed : Supposing the Protestant then to tell the priest, that candour required him to say, before they proceeded further, that, while he sincerely believed that Christ had delivered to his church the power of working miracles, there was not even one miracle,—(speaking of it in particular),—except those recorded in Scripture, which he believed :—Would this prevent the priest from receiving him into the Roman Catholic church? By no means. The priest would say, "ALL

" THE MIRACLES RELATED IN THE SCRIPTURE
" YOU MUST BELIEVE. I CANNOT RECEIVE
" YOU INTO THE CHURCH UNLESS YOU BE-" LIEVE THEM. ALL OTHER MIRACLES YOU
" MAY LEAVE TO THEIR FATE: THE CHURCH
" DOES NOT REQUIRE OUR BELIEF OF ANY
" ONE MIRACLE AMONG THEM."

LETTERS IV. & V.

ALLEGED PURER FAITH OF THE WELSH CHRISTIANS.

THESE Letters contain several observations which I think reprehensible. I shall notice one only of them.

“ Dr. Lingard,” you say, (p. 54), “ has asserted that the Welch must have had the same faith as Augustine: for he invited them to join in converting the Saxons:—this,” you remark, “ is true; but they were not to be permitted to join in the work, unless they first submitted to certain decisions of the church of Rome.”

Now, what were the conditions which these decisions required? Dr Lingard * informs us, that St. Augustine only required that they should observe the original computation of Easter; and should conform to the Roman rite, in the administration of baptism. Both were matters of discipline, and faith was concerned in neither. Thus, the demands of St. Augustine do not show that the church of Rome and the church of Wales differed in a single article of faith.

LETTER VI.

ST. DUNSTAN.

WHAT you say in this letter only calls upon me to notice the terms in which you mention my account of the disastrous event which happened at the assembly convened at Calne. I transcribe your words, (p. 58.) “ When you perused the “ story of the falling in of the floor at the Council
 “ of Calne, did you suddenly cease to read, before
 “ you came to that part which excites the suspicion
 “ of a trick, and which, as an honest historian, you “ would undoubtedly have mentioned, namely, that “ the beams and rafters did not give way, till the “ nobles, who refused to yield, reproached Dun“ stan, who thereupon cried out, ‘ I confess I am “ unwilling to be overcome; I commit the cause
 “ of the Church to the decision of Christ.’ ”

What can You mean? The whole of this passage You will find inserted, almost verbatim, in the very letter upon which You are now commenting. I there relate from Dr. Southey, that “ the speech of “ Biornhelm, a Scottish bishop, produced a great “ effect, and Dunstan did not attempt to answer
 “ it: he had laid aside, says his biographer, all
 “ his means, but prayer; you endeavour,” says
 “ he, “ to overcome me, who am now growing old,
 “ and disposed to silence rather than contention.

“ I confess I am unwilling to be overcome, and “ I commit the cause of the Church to Christ him“ self, as judge.’ No sooner had these words been “ spoken than the beams and rafters gave way.”

I do not again mention the circumstances of the archbishop’s speech, when I wind up the whole of the transactions in the last lines of my letter, not quite seven lines from the passage I have transcribed.

There, I thus express myself :—“ That a council “ was held at Calne ; that, during its sitting, the “ floor fell in ; that the ecclesiastics, the nobles and “ the other members, who attended it, were cast “ into the ruin ; that several lost their lives or “ were materially injured, and that Dunstan re“ mained unhurt by standing on a beam, are the “ only circumstances which history has transmitted “ to us.”

But history has not transmitted to us the archbishop’s speech.

It is perhaps to my omitting to mention St. Dunstan’s speech in this place, that you sneer at me, and impute “ historic dishonesty” to me :—hear my reasons for the omission :—

1.—The speech is not mentioned by the contemporary historians : they are wholly silent upon the synod at Calne.

2.—Ten historians,—Malmsbury*, Huntingdon, † Hoveden, ‡ Simon Dunelmensis, § Matthew

* De Pont, p. 34.

† p. 205.

Westminster*, Florence of Worcester, † Brompton, ‡ Gervase, § Rudborne, || and the Saxon Chronicle, ¶ mention the synod, and the disaster, but do not mention the archbishop's speech.—“This year,” says the Saxon Chronicle, a faithful register of the times, “the principal nobility of England fell at Calne from an upper floor, except the holy Archbishop Dunstan, who stood upon a beam; and some were grievously hurt, and some did not escape with their lives.”

3.—Both the disaster and the speech are mentioned by Osbern.

Putting then in one scale Osbern's mention of the speech, with his acknowledged ridiculous proneness to the marvellous, and on the other, the absolute silence of the ten historians upon the speech, can it be said with truth, that the speech is recorded by history?

If You really believe the charge against St. Dunstan, allow me to say, that never was so foul a crime believed upon less evidence.

I have said too much upon the charge you have brought against me in this place; but such is the consequence of controversy; a line of sneer or misrepresentation often requires hours of research, and pages of explanation or defence.

LETTERS VII. & VIII.

I. INVESTITURES AND IMMUNITIES:

II. ST. THOMAS À BECKET:

III. TEMPORAL POWER OF THE POPE.

IN the beginning of your first letter, You give the monks some praise: As to your charge against them of “erasing manuscripts,” I do not think it unlikely, that sometimes they were guilty, as You say they were, of “erasing a Greek tragedy, to write on the parchment an inferior composition;” but that “they erased from parchment any portion of the Scripture for such a purpose,” appears to me so highly improbable, that proof of it must be produced before I believe it.

I.

Investitures and Immunities.

The account of Investitures, inserted in my letters to Doctor Southey, is an abridgement of the account given of them in my “History of the Germanic Empire.” * Both were written with care; and nothing in the letters, which You have done me the honour to address to me, leads me to suspect any error in them. I do not think that sovereigns are entitled by divine right, to appoint to the sees of bishops : You seem to ascribe this right to them : You know that it is rejected by all the Presbyterian churches ; and with what bitter words of indignation, Calvin expressed himself of Elizabeth's assumption of the spiritual supremacy.

Of Immunities, I shall only confidently repeat, that no Roman Catholic imagines that ecclesiastics are, or even were, entitled by divine right, to the immunities for which Becket contended, in the first stage, as I have termed it, of his controversy with his sovereign.

II.

Saint Thomas à Becket.

The account given of this controversy in my letters to Doctor Southey, was abridged from the account which I had several years before given of it in my " Historical Memoirs of the English, Irish, and Scottish Catholics."* This was written after an attentive and dispassionate perusal both of the ancient and modern historians of this period of our history, I beg leave to insert as succinctly as possible, the conclusions to which I then arrived, after much reading and much meditating upon the subject.

1.—That the point in dispute respected the punishment of clerks for felony : the king con-

* Vol. II. chap. IV.

tending, that they should be first degraded by the ordinary, and then put into the hands of the magistrate, to be tried in the king's courts: the archbishop insisting, that for the first crime, the clerk should be tried in the bishop's court, and that, if he were convicted, he should be degraded and punished by spiritual inflictions, either with or without fine, imprisonment or flagellation, at the will of the court; but the prelate admitted, that a degraded clerk forfeited the protection of the ecclesiastical law; so that, if after his degradation he was guilty of felony, he might be prosecuted in the king's courts.

2.—That the point at issue between the king and the prelate was,—not what the law was before the Norman conquest, but, what it was at the actual time of the dispute: to this I beg leave to call your particular attention.

3.—That the Constitutions of Clarendon professed not to reform, or make an alteration in the law, but to describe its actual state; asserting, at the same time, that such as it then described it, such it had been from the first.

4.—That some of these Constitutions propounded what never had been,—what never afterwards was,—and what is not now the law of England.

5.—And therefore, that, on the merits, to use a legal term, the archbishop was completely in the right, and the monarch completely in the wrong.

To prove against Doctor Southey, that several of the Constitutions of Clarendon were innovations upon the actual state of the law in the reign of Henry II, I quoted a passage from Mr. Sharon Turner's History of England. In a note to your eighth letter, you say, (p. 75), " Mr. Butler " (p. 84) has quoted one half only of this passage, " to prove a point which was confuted by the " remainder." To disprove this charge, I shall now transcribe the whole passage, * and leave it, without note or comment, to the sentence of the the reader. The part quoted in my letter to Doctor Southey, is printed within the brackets.

" [In justice to Becket, it must be admitted, " that these famous articles completely changed " the legal and civil state of the clergy, and were " an actual subversion, as far as they went, of " the papal policy and system of hierarchy, so " boldly introduced by Gregory VII.] These new " Constitutions abolished that independence on the " legal tribunals of the country, which William " had unwarily permitted, and they again sub- " jected the clergy, as in the time of the Anglo- " Saxons, to the common law of the land. The " eighth article vested the ultimate judgment in " ecclesiastical causes in the king ; by the fourth, " no clergyman was to depart from the kingdom " without the royal licence ; and, if required, was " to give security, that he would do nothing " abroad to the prejudice of the king or the king- " dom ; by the twelfth, the revenues of all pre-“ celebrated Constitutions, though wise and just,

 “ and now substantially the law of the land, were “ yet so hostile to the great papal system of “ making the church independent of the secular “ power, if not superior to it, that an ecclesiastic
 “ of that day, according to the prevailing feeling

 “ fault of Becket lay in taking the prelacy with “ vindictive hostility.”

III.

*Temporal Power of the Pope.

1.—The Roman Catholics believe, that the Popes do not profess, directly or indirectly, by divine right, any title whatever to temporal power, either in secular or spiritual concerns.

In my “ History of the Revolutions of the

* I beg leave to refer to the account which I have given “ of the authority of the Pope, in the tenth Letter in “ The Book of the Roman-Catholic Church.”—This work has been translated into French, and I have the satisfaction to find it is approved.

“ Germanic Empire,”* and my “ Historical Memoirs of the English, Irish, and Scottish Catholics,”† a succinct account is given of the rise, extension, decline and fall of the Pope’s temporal power.

I first mention the rise of the Pope’s temporal power : I have thus abridged it in my seventh letter to Doctor Southey: “ From an humble “ fisherman, the Pope successively became owner “ of houses and lands, acquired the power of “ magistracy in Rome, and large territorial possessions in Italy, Dalmatia, Sicily, Sardinia, France
“ and Africa ; and ultimately obtained the rank
“ and consequence of a great temporal prince.”

I then proceed as follows :—

2.—“ The Popes soon advanced a still higher claim. In virtue of an authority, which they “ pretended to derive from heaven, some of them
“ asserted that the Pope was the supreme temporal lord of the universe, and that all princes
“ and civil governors were, even in temporal “ concerns, subject to them. In conformity to

“ this doctrine they took upon them to try, condemn and depose sovereign princes, to absolve subjects from their allegiance to them, and to grant their kingdom to others.

“ That a claim so unfounded and impious, so hostile to the peace of the world, and apparently so extravagant and visionary, should have been made, is strange :—stranger still, is the success it met with. There scarcely is a kingdom of Christian Europe, the sovereign of which did not, on some occasion or other, acquiesce in it, so far at least as to invoke it against his own antagonist; and, having once urged it against an antagonist, it was not always easy for him to deny the justice of it, when urged against himself.”

In a further part of the same work,* I mention the decline of the temporal power of the Popes. I assign it “ to their extravagant pretensions, unjust enterprises, and dissolute lives;—to the transfer of the papal see to Avignon; to the grand schism; to the discussions at the Councils of Constance, Basle and Pisa; to the writings of the men of learning of those times; and to the rough attacks of the Albigenses, Wickliffites, Waldenses, and the other separatists from the church, in the 14th and 15th centuries.”

3.—Finally, † I describe the total fall of the Pope’s temporal power. I notice the leading events † Ibid - - - d° - - Sect. 5.

in this part of its history. I then mention, that “ its fall was suspended for a time by the French “ league and other events, which divided many “ European states into a Roman Catholic and a “ Protestant party. The influence,” I then observe, “ which this gave the Popes, made them “ venture on those ENORMITIES which now excite so “ much astonishment,—the bulls by which they ab- “ solved the subjects of Henry IV of France, AND
 “ OUR ELIZABETH, from their allegiance and “ their concurrence in the league.”

4.—I then notice, 1st, The successful resistances of the temporal states in communion with the see of Rome, to the claims of the Popes to temporal power, in spiritual concerns. 2d, Those particularly of the Venetians to the claim of Pope Paul v. to the exercise of temporal power in their territory. 3d,
 I observe, that the falling fortunes of the claim induced Cardinal Bellarmine to propose a middle opinion upon it. 4th, I afterwards mention the attempt of Pope Innocent to annul by a protestation, in the form of a bull, several articles in the treaty of Westphalia, and the absolute inattention shown to this protestation, by the Catholic as well as the Protestant powers of Europe. I then mention the celebrated declaration of the clergy of France, in 1682. “ It is,” I say, “ expressed in “ Four Articles:” by the first, “ they declare, that “ kings and princes are not subject in temporal “ concerns, to ecclesiastical power; and cannot “ be deposed directly or indirectly by the authority

“ of the keys of the church ; nor their subjects “ discharged from the allegiance and duty which “ they owe them.”* I then observe, that the three other articles became subjects of dispute ;
 but that, in the declaration of the independence of the civil powers upon the spiritual, the Roman Catholics “ on this side of the Alps, universally “ acquiesced.”

I conclude with these words, “ that such a “ claim should have been made is one of the “ greatest misfortunes which have befallen Chris“ tianity.”

I must now add, that up to the very moment of the French Revolution, the Gallican declaration of 1682 was signed in France by every bishop, by every secular and regular ecclesiastic, by all professors of theology, and batchelors of divinity and canon law, and taught in all the schools ; and that the Pope granted institution to all the prelates, and

* It may not be improper to transcribe in this place, the language of the original :—“ Nous déclarons en conséquence, “ que les rois et les souverains ne sont soumis a aucun puissance “ ecclesiastique, par l'ordre de Dieu, dans les choses tempo“ relles ; qu'ils ne peuvent etre déposée directement ou in-“ directement, par l'autorité de clefs de l'église ; que leur “ sujets ne peuvent être dispenser de la soumission et de “ l'obeissance qu'ils leur doivent, ou absous du serment de “ fidélité ; et que cette doctrine, nécessaire pour la tranquillité “ publique, et non moins avantageuse a l'église que l'état, “ doivent etre inviolablement suivie comme conforme, a la “ parole de Dieu, a la tradition des saints peres, et aux ex“ amples des saints.”

acknowledged himself in communion with all the ecclesiastics and others who thus signed it.

In the negotiations between Pius VII and Napoleon, the latter vehemently urged the Pope to sign the articles of 1682. The Pope pertinaciously refused to sign the three last, but declared that his signature of the first was attended with no difficulty.*

I also beg leave to refer You to the statutes passed in this country before the Reformation, against the temporal power of the Pope, † and to the frequent instances of resistance by the Roman Catholic sovereigns of these realms to the Pope's temporal pretensions. ‡

Permit me to mention further,—the answers of the foreign universities to the questions proposed to them, by the direction of Mr. Pitt, and to the oaths taken by all his Majesty's Roman Catholic subjects.

At the end of my letters to Doctor Southey, I have inserted these questions, and the answers :

I have also inserted the oath of allegiance taken by his Majesty's Roman Catholic subjects; I shall insert them at the end of the present publication.—We swear by our oaths, “true allegiance to his Majesty, his heirs and successors, according to the act of settlement;—we renounce obedience and allegiance unto any other person, pretending a right to the crown of these realms;—we reject what we there expressly term, the unchristian and impious principle, that faith is not to be kept with heretics;—the deposing doctrine;—the belief that the Pope, or any other foreign potentate, hath any temporal or civil jurisdiction, power or pre-eminence, directly or indirectly within these realms;—we protest against all equivocation and mental reservation,—and against believing ourselves to be acquitted before God or man, or absolved of the declaration, by the Pope or any other authority.”

LETTER IX.

KING JOHN.

JUSTICE is due even to the devil: and therefore although I condemn the conduct of King John quite as much as Yourself, and have declared, in the letter to which You now refer, that both the monarch and the Pope were “inexcusable,” and that the ceremony, by which the former transferred his crown to the latter, was “ignominious,” I thought myself obliged to mention some circumstances attending it, not sufficiently noticed by historians, which appeared to me to show, that, although the conduct of the pontiff was highly blameable, and deserved the severest reprobation, the conduct of the king and his spiritual and temporal lords, merited at least an equal share of reproach.

IX. 1.

Your declaration, that You are almost tempted to believe all the accusations of Protestants against the fairness and candour of the Church of Rome;—and could also accuse me of insidious Jesuitism, for my representation of the conduct of king John, in the cession of his kingdom to the Pope:—

Addressing yourself to me, You say (page 86),—

“ You do not indeed defend the transaction :—but “ you endeavour to palliate it, by a plea, which “ almost tempts me to the charge of illiberality, “ in declaring my belief in all the accusations of “ Protestants against the fairness and candour of
 “ the Church of Rome. I could almost accuse
 “ you of insidious Jesuitism, when you venture to “ observe, that the submission of John took place,
 “ under a national apprehension of a French “ invasion, and omit to tell us, that the Pope was “ the cause of the danger.”

My expression is not only unobjectionable, but critically accurate.

Pope Innocent's transfer of the sovereignty of England to Philip of France, is an event, which I am confident was known to every person who has perused my letters to Doctor Southey. This circumstance alone vindicates me against your charge: But it is not all: Rapin, Hume, and all other historians inform us, that, before the ceremony was agreed to, a complete division of interests had taken place between the pontiff and Philip. The former had become jealous of the latter, as, “ after such mighty acquisitions he might,” to use the words of Hume, “ become too haughty to be bound in spiritual chains;” and had therefore sent Randolph on a secret mission to John, “ offering to take him into his protection against the French monarch's arms, if he would consent to hold his kingdom from him in vassalage.” This placed the monarch “ between two precipices, equally dangerous; he was under a necessity of casting himself down one or the other.” These are the words of Rapin,* If the monarch refused the offers of the pontiff, he must have surrendered his kingdom absolutely and without reserve to the French monarch: if he submitted to the pontiff, he would retain his kingdom,—shorn it is true, of its beams,—but still, one of the most powerful kingdoms of Europe:—The monarch and the barons preferred the latter. From this time, their contest was not with the Pope, or with the French monarch, acting under or executing the commands of the Pope, but, with the French monarch, acting independently of the Pope, and in the most direct opposition to him. All historians agree in describing the rage, the resentment and the hostilities of Philip.

My expression therefore is justified.

IX. 2.

Your charge, that the third canon of the Fourth Council of Lateran, is an article of the faith of Roman Catholics;—that it declares the Pope’s divine right to Temporal Dominion;—and that the disclaimer of it by the Roman Catholics, is not valid and cannot be depended upon, in consequence of their acknowledgment of the paramount authority of the Council.

This disclaimer You contend, is “ unsatisfactory;” and You proclaim that “ it will be unjustifiable in Protestants to rely upon it, till the “ Pope and his government shall formally dis-

* Fol. Edit. Vol. i. p. 272.

“ claim the right of the Pope to temporal dominion beyond his own temporal territories.” I collect that the following is an out-line of Your reasoning upon this subject:—

1. The creed of Pius IV. contains an article, by which the subscribers of the creed recognize and declare their belief of all the doctrines of the general councils :

2. The fourth Council of Lateran was a general council, and was confirmed by the Council of Trent, also a general council :

3. The third canon of the fourth Council of Lateran enjoins the deposition of heretical princes :

4. It is therefore an article of the faith of Roman Catholics, that it is their duty, or, at least, that it is lawful for them to depose heretical princes :

5. By this tenet, they recognize the temporal dominion of the Pope in all Christian states, to be an article of their faith :

6. It is true, that this doctrine has been disclaimed by the English, Irish and Scottish Catholics upon oath :

7. But, it is also true, that their oaths on this subject cannot be relied upon, because they are necessarily taken with the reserve of the obedience due by Catholics to the canons of general councils,—and consequently, with the reserve of the obedience due by them to the third canon of the fourth Council of Lateran,—if the Pope should require their obedience to it :

8. Hence their oaths and declaimers are not absolutely valid :

9. And nothing can give them absolute validity, or that validity which it is justifiable for a Protestant to rely upon, except a declaration of as high authority as that which enacted the canon.

I have endeavoured to express your sentiments accurately : I trust I have succeeded.

I shall discuss them separately.

But before I proceed,—I must protest against the great impropriety of requiring from Roman Catholics, any thing like argument or proof, to show that their oaths, or even their mere declarations, are to be relied upon. When such a body as the British and Irish clergy, nobility and gentry, solemnly deny their belief or disbelief of a particular doctrine,—to put them to the proof of the truth of this belief or disbelief, is to insult the Broad-Stone of honour : Every gentleman feels they should be believed without par lance.

But since proof is called for,—humbling as it is,—let us produce it :—

IX. 3.

Discussion of the Charge.

1.—I shall first transcribe the Article in the Creed of Pius IV.

“ I also profess, and undoubtedly receive, all “ other things delivered, defined, and declared
“ by the sacred canons, and general councils, and “ particularly by the Holy Council of Trent; and “ likewise, I also condemn, reject and anathema“ tize all things contrary thereto, and all heresies “ whatsoever, condemned and anathematized by
“ the Church.”

Here, allow me to make two observations, which, in the present discussion, and in every discussion of the same nature, should always be kept in mind:—1. That the councils mentioned in this article of the creed of Pope Pius IV. are general or œcumenical councils, and none other:—2. And that the decrees, even of these councils, are only articles of faith, when they propound doctrines to be believed as articles of faith by the universal church. All doctrines propounded by particular councils, or even propounded by general or œcumenical councils, but not proposed by these to be articles of faith, a Roman Catholic may disbelieve, without ceasing to be a Roman Catholic. This, in discussions like the present, should never be forgotten.

2.—I shall now briefly state the formation of the fourth Council of Lateran.

Pope Innocent III. had convened this council to meet at the patriarchal church of St. John, at the Lateran-gate, in the city of Rome. Being the fourth council held in this church, it is usually called the fourth council of Lateran: it is considered by Roman Catholics to be the eighth general or œcumenical council.

It was attended by 412 prelates, among whom were the patriarchs of Constantinople and Jerusalem, and by 71 primates or metropolitan prelates, by 800 abbots or priors, and by a considerable number of deputies from absent ecclesiastical dignitaries: Frederick, the emperor elect of Germany, the emperor of Constantinople, the kings of England, France, Hungary, Jerusalem, Cyprus and Arragon, and several princes of the second order, attended it by their ambassadors.

Thus, it was not only a general or œcumenical council: it was also a convention, both of the ecclesiastical and temporal states of Europe, acting in person or by their deputies. The Pope presided in person over the council.

His holiness presented to the council seventy canons, which he had caused to be framed. The first is a profession of faith, containing several counter-positions to the errors of the Albigenses; and a denunciation of anathema against all the heretics which it proscribed.

3.—The third canon of this Council of Lateran is expressed in these terms.

It enjoins, that “heretics shall, after their con“ demnation, be delivered over to the secular

“ powers. The temporal lords are to be admo“ nished, and, if it should be found necessary, “ compelled by censures, to take an oath in public,
“ to exterminate heretics from their territories. If “ the temporal lord, being thus required and ad“ monished by the church, shall refuse to purge his “ land from heretical pravity, he shall be excommu“ nicated by the metropolitan and his suffragans :
“ on his neglect, during twelve months, to give “ them satisfaction, this shall be notified to the “ Pope, and, upon such information, his holiness “ shall denounce the offender’s vassals to be ab“ solved by law from their obligation of fealty, and “ expose his lands to be occupied by catholics,
“ who, having exterminated the heretics from it, “ shall possess them without any contradiction, and “ preserve them in the purity of the faith, saving “ however the right of the superior lord, provided “ that he raised no objection to impede the pro“ ceeding. The same method of discipline is like“ wise to be observed towards those who have no “ superior lord.”

IX. 4.

Particular Discussion of the third Canon of the Fourth Council of Lateran.

Thus far, I believe, we are agreed. Your remaining positions set us asunder, far as pole from pole.

As the subject is of importance ; as the arguments, which you draw from it, are highly injurious to the Roman Catholic Church; and, as they are the groundwork of your publication, and incessantly occur in it, I shall give this celebrated canon particular consideration.

I.—I must first observe, that, what are termed the canons of the fourth Council of Lateran were not decreed by the council, but only propounded to it by the Pope; and that the members of the council separated, without having come to any resolutions upon them.*

* This is proved by Dupin in his work, “De Antiquâ Ecclesiæ Disciplinâ, Dissertationes Historicæ; Dissert. VII. ch. iii. s. 4.” I shall transcribe his words:—

He cites the canon, and the assertion that it proves the doctrine of the deposing power, and then proceeds in these words:—“Respondeo primò: Nec ecclesiam, nec concilium generale eam representans quidquam habere juris in temporalia regum bona, nec de iis aliquid statuere posse; quippe cum regum potestas immediatè à Deo sit, nemo eam iis auferre potest, aut aliquid juris alteri in eam tribuere, præter ipsummet Deum. Ergo, etiam si ecclesia vel concilium hujusmodi sibi arrogaret auctoritatem, non propterea regibus eâ cedendum foret. Sicut ecclesia non debet legibus principum parere, cum in destructionem legis Dei conditæ sunt. Et certè definitiones conciliorum etiam generalium nullam vim habent, si ferantur circa res, quæ non pertinent ad religionem & fidem, puta circa res naturales, astronomicas, atque etiam politicas; & si quid de iis statuatur, non tenemur eorum decretis tanquam infallibilibus adhærere; quapropter canon ille, cum sit de negotio civili, nullam vim habere potest nisi ex consensu regum.”

“Respondeo secundo: Hunc canonem non fuisse ab universo concilio conciliariter, ut loquuntur, conditum; sed à solo

It necessarily follows, that those canons only of the council can be considered as decrees of the church, so far as they were subsequently accepted by her :

But the church never has accepted the third canon :

Therefore it is no canon of the council.

II.—It is also to be observed, that the third canon is an interpolation.*

III.—But taking the authenticity and validity of the canon for granted, it must be considered,—

1st.—That, according to the doctrine of the Roman Catholic Church, neither the Pope nor the church has any power to interfere in the temporal concerns either of catholics or non-catholics, or to inflict temporal penalties of any kind, or for any cause, upon either :

“ omnesque ad concilium accedentes artificiosè ludificatus est, desiit. Illi enim cum jam nihil geri in tanto negotio cernerent, redeundi ad sua cupidi, veniam sigillatim petierunt, quibus Papa non concessit, antequam sibi grandem pecuniam promississent mercatoribus Romanis priùs accipere mutuo Papæque solvere coacti sunt antequam discedere Româ potuissent. Papa jam acceptâ pecuniâ quætuosum hoc concilium dissolvit gratis, totusque clerus abiit tristis. Hic autem historicus ne suspectus habeatur, laudatus est ab Innocentio IV. ut constat ex litteris ejusdum Innocentii, quas ipse refert in Historiâ Angliæ.

“ Itaque nulli à concilio canones sunt conditi sed quædam a Pontifice Romano decreta sunt confecta & in concilio lectâ quorum nonnulla plerisque videbantur onerosa : sed vel ex ipsâ istorum canonum lectione patet eos non fuisse a concilio editos, vel non eo modo qui nunc habentur.”

* Collier's Ecc. Hist. Book II. p. 424.

2d.—That, when a council is assembled, and both spiritual and temporal powers attend, or act in it, the proceedings of the council, so far as they regard spiritual concerns, or the exercise of spiritual authority, derive their origination and effect from the spiritual power; and, so far as they regard temporal concerns, or the exercise of temporal authority, derive their origination and effect from the temporal powers.

3d.—And that, whenever any temporal power withdraws its concurrence in any temporal legislation of a council, that legislation ceases in the state thus withdrawing its concurrence.

It follows,—

1st.—That the third canon of the fourth Council of Lateran,—(taking its authenticity for granted, which for the sake of argument, I allow, but do not admit),—being, so far as it respected the temporal penalties inflicted by it, an act of temporal legislation,—was no longer in force, in respect to any state, than the concurrence of that state in the temporal legislation of the canon, continued:

2d.—That all the temporal states represented in the Council of Lateran, having withheld or withdrawn their concurrence in the temporal legislation of the third canon of the council, the canon, as to the temporal penalties inflicted by it, became, if it ever was in force, an absolute nullity in respect to these:

3d.—And that the same may be said of every other canon or ecclesiastical provision of the church, which relates to a temporal concern, or is to be carried into effect by temporal power. Such a canon or provision never had any legal effect in any state, unless it had the sanction of that state, and its legal effect in it continued no longer than the state sanctioned it.*

That this is the proper construction of the canon is proved beyond controversy, by a transaction, which took place soon after the council broke up. Pope Honorius, who succeeded Innocent, required the Emperor Frederick, to insert in the constitutions of the empire, a canon similar to the third canon of the fourth Council of Lateran. The Emperor inserted it, but with a material alteration.† Is not this a direct acknowledgment by the Pope himself, that, without the sanction of the temporal power, the canon, so far as it contained temporal provisions, had no effect.

The manner in which the Council of Trent has been received by Roman Catholic states, renders every discussion of this subject unnecessary. All the Catholic powers agreed both theoretically and practically, that, so far as the council affected to regulate temporal concerns, or inflict temporal penalties in their dominions, the validity of its provisions depended on their pleasure.

There is not in Europe a Roman Catholic state, in which the council has been received without this limitation.

IV.—Admitting, however, the authenticity of the canon, and that it cannot be defended on the ground which has been suggested, still the canon was not a dogma of faith, or propounded as such by the council; it was merely an ordinance of exterior discipline, which had no force upon individuals till received by the ecclesiastical power in what concerned the church, and by the civil power in what concerned the state.*

Thus,—I have clearly and incontestibly demonstrated, that the third canon of the fourth Council of Lateran, expresses no dogma of faith, or article of Catholic doctrine, which, at this time, binds, implicates, or affects the persons or consciences of Catholics, either as a body or as individuals.

Alledged insufficiency of Catholic Disclaimers of the Pope's Temporal Dominion.

YOU tell us, (page 98), that “neither our dis-claiming the principle,”—(of the Pope’s universal temporal dominion),—“nor all the Romanists unitedly disclaiming it, can be sufficient to justify

* Dr. Milner’s fourth Letter to a Prebendary.

“ a Protestant in believing the validity, though he “ will not doubt the sincerity of our denial. The “ power, which once claimed universal temporal “ dominion still exists, and still asserts the truth “ of the principles on which that claim was “ founded.”

In a further part of your work, (page 122), You say,— “ These doctrines of the Roman Church “ have been promulgated by councils, popes and “ canonists. They must be rescinded by the same “ authorities, or they may be again revived. The “ Pope in council must deny them.——Neither
 “ the united voice of the Romanists in England, nor “ of Europe, nor of all the universities, are a suffi“ cient guarantee against it. The Pope, the “ council, the church of Rome, as we recognize it
 “ by its government, must publicly retract the “ past; and then, and then only, the accusations
 “ founded on history will be withdrawn.”

I have stated your charge in your own words. You declare by it, explicitly, that “ neither our “ disclaiming the principle, nor all the Romanists “ unitedly disclaiming it, can be sufficient to justify
 “ a Protestant in believing the validity, though
 “ he will not doubt the sincerity of our denial.”

Our denial, You well know, has been given, and is continued to be given UPON OATH.

By the expression which I have just quoted, You declare, that “ a Protestant is not justified in “ believing the validity of this denial.”

Thus far, I understand You; but, when, after saying, that “ a Protestant is not justified in believing the validity of our denial,” You add, “ although he will not doubt its sincerity,” (given as You are aware it is, upon oath),—I am not certain that I do understand Your meaning. In my opinion, the validity and sincerity of an oath, so far as respects the conscientious obligation, or the conscientious integrity of the person who takes it, are convertible terms.

Does this passage mean, that, sensible as You must be, that “ telling a gentleman that You doubt his oath,” is offering him THE GREATEST POSSIBLE INSULT,—You thought that the insult would be gentler,—or that the intent to insult would become debateable, by inserting the words—“ tho’ he will not doubt it.”—thus, not expressly saying, but most unquestionably implying, that his oath may, with propriety, be doubted ?

If this be the meaning of the expression, it imports neither more or less, than that, You think Protestants are unjustifiable, if they do not doubt the oaths, which we have taken in compliance with the acts of his late Majesty.

Connecting this passage with your requisition in page 122, that “ the denial, to be valid, should be made by the Pope and his government,” I conjecture, that the result of all You say is, that a Catholic’s oath of allegiance, and his disclaimer of all principles incompatible with it, cannot be relied upon,—because, while he takes the oath, or disclaims the principles incompatible with it, he recognizes a paramount authority, which can discharge his conscience from the obligations of the oath and disclaimer.

If this be the fact, —if, while the Catholics take the oath, or make this disclaimer, they recognize a paramount authority, which may dispense with its obligations, —they are PERJURED VILLAINS!!! There is no medium.

And their villainy is aggravated, by the circumstance, that in the same oath, in which they swear allegiance to his Majesty and his successors, they swear to the disclaimer of the dispensing authority.

“ And, I do solemnly,” says the Roman Catholic in this oath,—“ in the presence of God, “ profess, testify and declare, that I do make the “ declaration and every part thereof, in the plain “ and ordinary sense of the words of this oath, “ without any evasion, equivocation or mental “ reservation whatever, and without any dispensa- “ tion already granted by the Pope, or the authority “ of the see of Rome, or any person whatsoever, “ and without thinking that I am or can be ac- “ quitted before God or man, or absolved of this “ declaration or any part thereof, although the “ Pope, or any other person or authority what- “ soever, shall dispense with or annul the same, or “ declare it was null or void. So help me God.”

If your meaning be what I have represented,
THE CHARGE WHICH IT BRINGS AGAINST THE CATHOLICS, IS MOST HORRIBLE:

AND IS MOST UNJUST.

“ When I consider,” said Mr. Fox, in moving the Catholic claims in 1805,* “ the state of religion in Europe, of which perhaps three-fourths of the people are Roman Catholics, I am astonished that such opinions respecting that religion are entertained. Is it possible, that any man can be found bold enough to say, of three-fourths of the inhabitants of civilized Europe, that they are not to be believed upon oath? Such an assertion implies that Roman Catholic nations are not only incapable of the relations of peace and amity, but unfit for the relations of any society whatever. Every enlightened mind, every man who wishes well to his country, must treat it both with scorn and indignation.”

This is the language of a gentleman, a statesman, and a scholar. With all the rest of the world it will have weight:—but with You!—You yourself assure us, it has none. “ Will you allow me,” You thus address me (p. 308), “ to recommend to you in your next edition, to expunge the frequent argument, which is rather insinuated than expressed, arising from the use of such names as Pitt, Burke, Fox, Grattan, Canning, the Earl of Liverpool, and many others. Believe me, they have no weight with him who desires facts, and rests his argument on this solid foundation.”—I shall not take your advice :

* Proceedings and Debates upon the Petition. Printed for Cuthell and Martin, in 1805. 8vo.

no opportunity of using these names to serve the Catholic cause shall ever occur, in which I will not use them. Names so honourable to the Roman Catholics, and so serviceable for the justification of the Catholics against the horrid charges too often brought against them, nothing shall induce me to expunge. In my memory they shall ever live; and while my humble pages shall remain, my humble pages shall record their names, their kindness to us, and our gratitude to them.

IX. 5.

Alleged necessity, that to give validity to Catholic denial of the Pope's universal Temporal Dominion, the Pope and his government must deny it.

I confidently assert,—1st, that such a denial by the Pope and his council, is perfectly unnecessary:

2dly.—That, whether necessary or unnecessary, it has been given:

3dly.—And that it is the universal opinion of the Roman Catholic church, that Roman Catholics may conscientiously believe that the Pope has NO RIGHT, DIVINE OR HUMAN, to universal temporal dominion, or to any temporal dominion, except in his own temporal territory.

1.—All your arguments to show the necessity of requiring from the Pope and his government a denial or disclaimer of his temporal dominion, rest on your reasoning upon the third canon of the Fourth Council of Lateran;—I have abundantly shown, that this canon, if, as to its temporal provisions, it ever was in force, does not now exist. Such a denial is therefore perfectly unnecessary.

2.—It has, however, been given.

A few lines will place this beyond controversy.

I beg you to recollect the total disregard shown to Pope Innocent's protestation against the treaty of Westphalia; the Gallican declaration of 1682; and the oaths of the English, Irish, and Scottish Catholics, by which the universal temporal dominion of the Pope is absolutely denied.

I request you to observe, that I use the words "universal temporal dominion of the Pope," because they are your words. In my use of them, I wish them considered to extend also to any temporal dominion whatsoever beyond the limits of his own realm.

3.—Now, mark my TWO SYLLOGISMS.

I.—It is the universal opinion of the Roman Catholic church, that whenever the church of any country professes a religious doctrine,—and the Roman see, and the other Roman Catholic churches, being apprised and aware of her holding it, continue in communion with her,—the Roman see, and the Church of Rome, acknowledge that the doctrine so professed by that church, is consistent with the faith of the Roman Catholic church :

But, the Gallican declaration of 1682,—the disregard of Pope Innocent's protestation against the peace of Westphalia, and the oaths of the English, Irish, and Scottish Roman Catholics, are explicit and unqualified disclaimers of the Pope's temporal dominion;—and the Roman see and the other Roman Catholic churches, have been apprised of them from the first to the present time;—yet the Roman see, and the other Roman Catholic churches, have always been in communion with the churches, and the states, in which these explicit and unqualified disclaimers have been made:

Therefore,—the Roman see and the Roman Catholic church have acknowledged and do acknowledge, that this disclaimer of the Pope's temporal dominion is consistent with the faith of the Roman Catholic Church:

II.—Now, if the Pope, or the Roman Catholic Church, can, in the opinion of Roman Catholics, absolve or discharge them from the oaths of allegiance and disclaimer taken by them, it can only be, because those oaths contain something contrary to the faith of the Roman Catholic Church:

But, by communicating perseverantly with the churches in which these oaths of allegiance and disclaimer have been taken, the Roman see and the Roman Catholic church, acknowledge that these oaths of allegiance and disclaimer accord with the faith of the Roman Catholic church:

Therefore,—neither the Pope nor the Roman Catholic Church can absolve or discharge Roman Catholics from these oaths of allegiance and disclaimer.

It remains only to observe,—that this acknowledgment of the Pope and the universal church, is equipollent to a decree of a council ; and is, in one sense, more than equipollent to it, as the church is the principal, or instituant ; the council is its representative, or instituted organ.

Thus, my propositions are proved. You have all you have called for. The Pope and the universal church have acknowledged, as fully and as explicitly as can be done by words or deeds, that they have no authority, human or divine, to absolve the members of the Roman Catholic Church from their oaths of allegiance. Their allegiance therefore is valid, and may be depended upon.

“ I have heard,” said the Earl of Liverpool, in the debate upon the Catholic question in the year 1810, “ allusions this night to doctrines, “ which I do hope, no man now believes the “ Catholics to entertain ; nor is there any ground “ that the question is opposed on any such pre- “ tence. THE EXPLANATIONS, WHICH HAVE “ BEEN GIVEN ON THIS HEAD, ARE COM- “ PLETELY SATISFACTORY.”

LETTER X.

VIEW OF THE ROMISH SYSTEM.

1.—I EVIDENTLY meant, that what I said upon this subject in “The Book of the Roman Catholic Church,” should not be considered as a theological discussion of the truth of her doctrines: I merely wished to present a succinct account of some which are objected to by Protestants, for the purpose of showing that these contained nothing inconsistent with morality or good government; and that this had been acknowledged, in many instances, by Protestant writers of distinction. Upon this part of my work, You and others have attacked it. Thus the subject is before the public, and to their conclusions upon it I shall leave it.

With some observations, however, I shall now trouble you.

2.—The Roman Catholic religion satisfied the reason of such men as Bossuet, Fénelon, Bourdaloue, Massillon, d’Aguésseau and Pascal. If I deserve what You intimate in this letter, (p. 101, 102), for my belief of her doctrines, may I not comfort myself with the thought, that all you say applies as much to those great men as to me?

In page 107, I find this sentence addressed to me,—“I omit your sneer at the amount of a proc-“ tor’s bill. It was not made with your usual courtesy ; neither was it relative or necessary.” My letter contains no sneer : and I am quite confident, that there is not in the profession even one person, who will believe that any thing I have written contains a sneer at any class of its members, or any individual member of it.—Was your remark relative or necessary?

3.—In page 138, You say—“ You are incorrect in your assertion, that the Howards and Stourtons are excluded from Parliament, merely because of their belief in transubstantiation. They are so excluded, because the assertors of this doctrine are said to render imperfect allegiance to their sovereign.”

The allegiance of the Howards and the Stourtons to their sovereign, is perfect. They consider it the grossest of affronts, to be told that it is not.—

* Allegiance to the Pope is perfect nonsense.

* Addresses of the present writer to the Public, upon “ the Coronation Oath,” and the alleged “ Divided Allegiance of the Roman Catholics,” are inserted in the Appendix.

LETTER XI.

RISE OF THE REFORMATION,*—THE MENDICANT ORDERS.—PERSECUTION UNDER THE HOUSE OF LANCASTER.

1.—(1.) IN pages 123, 124, and 130, of your work, You thus address me :—“ Lamentable indeed, was your error of judgment, when you ventured to repeat the scandal of a former age, and to attribute the rise of the Reformation to the general diffusion of the opinion of Manes.”

(2.)—“ You ascribe also to the Albigenses, the doctrines of that notorious heresiarch. The reader, who is not well acquainted with history, would conclude from your statement, that the sentiments of the reformers, in the age of Cranmer and Luther, and consequently the opinions of the Protestants of the church of England at present, are the identical errors which are imputed to Manichæus.”

(3.)—“ No controversialist was ever more unfortunate in his argument than You have unwittingly been, in reviving the exploded notion, that the faith of Protestants was the creed of Manichæus.”

* The Title given by Doctor Southey to the Chapter, to which this letter is an answer, and therefore prefixed to this letter.

(4.)—"As you only insinuate, that the political opinions of the Manichæans, were the real prelude to the doctrines of liberty and equality, so frightfully propagated in our own time, I shall not enter upon that discussion. The design of the insinuation is obvious, and it is unworthy, indeed it is unworthy of You."

Each of these sentences convey an heavy accusation against me, and each of these accusations is absolutely groundless.

I have said,—and it is certainly true,—that both Catholics and Protestants agree, that the opinions and conduct of these religionists "led to Henry's reformation;"* and that "Lollardism † prepared the public mind for the religious innovations which afterwards took place." But I have not said, what You attribute to me, in the passages which I have cited from your work.

(1.)—I have not, in any of my Letters to Doctor Southey, or in any of my works, attributed the rise of the Reformation to the "diffusion of the general opinions of Manes." I believe,—and I have always believed the contrary.

(2.)—I have not, in any of my Letters to Doctor Southey, or in any other work, said or insinuated, that "the sentiments of the Reformers, in the age of Cranmer and Luther, and consequently the opinions of the Protestants of the Church of

* Hist. Mem. Vol I. Ch. x. p. 94.

† Ibid. p. 118.

“ England at present, are the identical errors which are imputed to Manichæus :” I believe, —and have always believed the contrary.

I have even said the contrary in “ the Book of the Roman Catholic Church.”* I have there said, in conformity with Bossuet’s assertion in his Controversy with Claude, that, “ when the church of the Reformers first separated from the one, the holy, the Roman Catholic Church, their church could not, by their own confession, enter into communion with a single church in the whole world.”

I have also said the contrary in my “ Revolutions of the Germanic Empire.”† I there mention the “ rough attack made on the Popes by the Albigenses, Wickliffites, Waldenses, Lollards and other heretics of the 14th and 15th centuries.” It must be admitted on the one hand, I then say, “ that these maintained several doctrines irreconcilable with those of the Gospel and civil society ; so that it is amazing that the reformed churches should be so anxious to prove their descent from them ; and on the other, that they brought charges against some temporal usurpations of the Popes and churchmen, to which their advocates could make no reply.”

(3.)—I have never said that the faith of Protestants was the creed of Manichæus.—I believe, —and I have always believed the contrary.

† Part IV, Sec. II. 2.

(4.)—I have not insinuated, that the “ political opinions of the Manichæans were the real prelude to the doctrines of liberty and equality, so frightfully propagated in our times.”—All I have stated is, that, “ the writers whom I have mentioned, have said little on the political tenets of the sectaries; that those, who should investigate the subject, should consult Monetæ adversus Catharos et Valdenses, libri quinque,” and that I wished Dr. Southey would undertake the investigation; but that he “ would not complete it in the manner his friends would wish, without ransacking foreign libraries,—I observe that the great point for investigation is, whether these sectaries did not, by their disorganizing tenets, prelude to the doctrines of liberty and equality.” In what I have said, is there one word that insinuates an opinion of my own, that they did? I have read and thought much on the subject; but I have met with no satisfactory evidence for the affirmative, though I think I have met with both facts and authorities for it, which deserve consideration.

2.—Most sincerely do I condemn the persecution of the Lollards, and every other persecution, either by Catholics or non-Catholics, with which the annals of history are stained. No person has spoken with greater harshness than I have done of the Inquisition, or of the revocation of the edict of Nantes,—and I have studied the history of each with attention. If the recent outrages at Nismes have been fairly represented,—of which I entertain some doubt,—I think they deserve all the abuse which they have received in this country.

I say the same of the persecution of the Waldenses. But I have not seen a Roman Catholic account of this persecution; and I never come to a conclusion upon any subject, before I have heard both sides. For the honour of my church, I hope that much exaggeration of the accounts given by Protestants of the persecutions of this worthy and unhappy people, can be proved. If it cannot, there is not in language an expression of condemnation, or, in the human heart a feeling of detestation, which they do not deserve.

In page 141,—You mention my account of “the serene demeanor of some nuns, in the French Revolution, who chaunted their hymns to the Virgin, till the sounds ceased only with the execution of the last of their number.—You afterwards say,—let me not seem harsh, if I inquire, whether active virtue, as well as passive resignation, would not have been as ornamental to the sufferers, and more useful to society? Would not the cause of virtue, religion, morality and order, have been more promoted by the good example which these excellent women might have set, as mothers, daughters and sisters, in social life, than by their learning the Litanies of the Virgin in the cloister, and singing them in their way to the scaffold?”

In the first place,—allow me to say, that, speaking generally, the ladies, with whom convents were filled, were in those scanty circumstances, which make poor and uncomfortable sisters, and poor and uncomfortable aunts, and either prevent marriage or occasion poor and uncomfortable marriages, and thus fill the world with beings that are wretched in themselves, and a burthen to the state. To ladies of this description, a convent was an invaluable retreat; and, from my own knowledge, I most confidently affirm, an abode of happiness. In the next place, allow me to ask, whether it was not greatly to the advantage of the state, that it should possess such permanent institutions as convents of females, for the instruction of the female portion of the community of every rank and every condition? Can it be justly said, that such an employment was not active virtue of the most useful kind? Is it fairly described, by saying, that “the inmates learned the litanies of the Virgin, and sung them in their way to the scaffold.” What confirmed habits of faith, of hope, of charity, must they have acquired in the convents, to have so died?

3.—No person admired or felt more than I did, the reception of the French exiles in this country. An humble tribute of admiration which I paid to it, I transcribe in a note.*

* “At the respectable and afflicting spectacle which so many sufferers for conscientious adherence to religious principle, presented, the English heart swelled with every honourable feeling. A general appeal to the public was resolved upon. The late Mr. John Wilmot, then member of Parlia-

You return to our Legends.—I have told you, and I tell you again, that they make no part of the

“ment for the city of Coventry, took the lead in the work of “beneficence. The plan of it was concerted by him, Mr. Ed“mund Burke, and Sir Phillips Metcalfe. An address to the “public was accordingly framed by Mr. Burke, and inserted “in all the newspapers. It produced a subscription of “£.33,775. 15s. 9½*d.* This ample sum for a time supplied
 “the wants of the sufferers. At length, however, it was ex“hausted; and in the following year, another subscription was “set on foot. The venerable name of King George the Third “appeared first on this list. This subscription amounted to the “sum of £.41,304. 12s. 6¾*d.* But this too was exhausted.

“The measure of private charity being thus exceeded, Par“liament interposed, and from December 1793, voted annually
 “a sum for the relief of the ecclesiastics and lay emigrants.
 “This appears by an account which the writer received from “Mr. Wilmot, to have reached on the 7th day of June 1806,
 “the sum of £.1,864,825. 9s. 8*d.* The management of these “sums was left to a committee, of which Mr. Wilmot was the “president; and the committee confided the distribution of the “succours of the clergy to the Bishop of St. Pol de Leon. A “general scale for the distribution of the succours was fixed:
 “the bishops and the magistracy received an allowance some“what larger than others: but the largest allowance was “small, and none was made to those who had other means of “subsistence. The munificence of Parliament did not however, “suspend the continuance of private charity. Individual “kindness and aid accompanied the emigrants to the last.
 “Here the writer begs leave to mention an instance of the “splendid munificence of the late Earl Rosslyn, then Chan“cellor of England. It was mentioned at his lordship’s table, “that the Chancellor of France was distressed, by not being “able to procure the discount of a bill which he had brought “from France, ‘The Chancellor of England,’ said Lord
 “Rosslyn, ‘is the only person to whom the Chancellor

“ of France should apply to discount his bills.’ The money “ was immediately sent, and while the seals remained in “ his hands, he annually sent a sum of equal amount to the “ Chancellor of France. At Winchester, at Guilford, and in “ other places, public buildings were appropriated for the “ accommodation of the clergy. In the hurry in which they “ had been forced to fly, many of them had been obliged to “ leave behind them their books of prayer. To supply in part
“ this want, the University of Oxford printed for them 2,000 “ copies of the Vulgate version of the New Testament from the “ edition of Barbou; and the late Marquis of Buckingham “ printed an equal number of the same sacred work, at his own “ expence. Every rank and description of persons, exerted “ itself for their relief. There is reason to suppose, that the “ money contributed for this honourable purpose, by individuals “ whose donations never came before the public eye, was equal “ to the largest of the two subscriptions which have been men“ tioned. To the very last, Mr. John Wilmot continued his “ kind and minute attention to the noble work of humanity.
“ It adds incalculably to it’s merit, that it was not a sudden “ burst of beneficence: it was a cool, deliberate, and system“ atic exertion, which charity dictated, organized and continued “ for a long succession of years, and which in its last year, “ was as kind, as active, and as energetic, as in its first.
“ Among the individuals who made themselves most useful, one “ unquestionably holds the first place. ‘ At the name,’ says
“ the Abbé Barruel, ‘ of Mrs. Dorothy Silburn, every French “ ‘ priest raises his hands to heaven to implore its blessings on “ ‘ her.’ The bishop of St. Pol took his abode in her house;
“ and it soon became the central point, to which every French“ man in distress found his way. It may easily be conceived, “ that great as were the sums appropriated for the relief of the “ French clergy, the number of those who partook of them were “ so large, as to make the allowance of each a scanty provision

“ speak of them as he pleases. I only request, that, where he finds that any of these legends possess that “ even for bare subsistence; so that all were obliged to submit to great privations, and, from one circumstance or other, some were occasionally in actual want. Here Mrs. Silburn interfered. Where more food, more raiment, more medicine, than the succours afforded, was wanted, it was generally procured by her or her exertions. Work and labour she found for those who sought them. The soothing word, the kind action, never failed her; all the unpleasantness which distress unavoidably creates, she bore with patience. Her incessant exertions she never abated. The scenes thus described by the writer he himself witnessed: and all who beheld them, felt and remarked, that much of the success, and the excellent management which attended the good work, was owing to her. To use the expression of a French prelate, ‘ the glory of the nation, on this occasion, was increased by the part which Mrs. Silburn acted in it.’ On the final closing of the account, his Majesty was graciously pleased to show his sentiments of her conduct by granting to her an annual pension of 100*l.* for her life:—never was a pension better merited.

“ On the other hand, the conduct of the objects of this bounty was most edifying. Thrown, on a sudden, into a foreign country, differing from theirs in language, manners, habits and religion, the uniform tenor of their decorous and pious lives obtained for them universal regard. Their attachment to their religious creed, they neither concealed nor obtruded. It was evidently their first object to find opportunities of celebrating the sacred mysteries, and of reciting the offices of their liturgy. Most happy was he, who obtained the cure of a congregation, or who, like the Abbé Caron, could establish some institution useful to his countrymen. Who does not respect feelings at once so respectable and so religious? Hence flowed their cheerfulness and serenity of mind above suffering and want. ‘ I saw ‘ them,’ a gentlemen said to the writer of these pages, amount of historical fact, which, by the acknowledged rules of evidence, entitles them to credit, he should permit me to believe them:—that, as a gentleman can always tell a truth, however offensive, in gentlemanly language, he should speak of those he disbelieves, in terms that are not ungentlemanly,—and that, while he laughs at the legend, he should admit the virtues, if they are well authenticated, of the saint whom the legend was sillily intended to ornament. These are such as Christians of every denomination must admire. Who is the canonized or beatified king,—that was not the father of his people: the canonized or beatified bishop,—that was not the incessant preacher of the word of God, and the father of the poor, denying himself all but necessities, to supply their wants? Who, the canonized or beatified prebendary—whose regular and devout attendance, in every day of the year, at the seven canonical hours of the Roman Catholic church, was not a continual tribute of praise and adoration to the Deity, and an edifying excitement to devotion? Who, the canonized or beatified curate, that did not consume himself in the service of his parishioners? What canonized or beatified

“ ‘ hurrying in the bitterest weather, over the ice of Holland,
 “ ‘ when the French invaded that territory. They had scarcely
 “ ‘ the means of subsistence; the wind blew, the snow fell, the “ ‘ army was fast approaching, and they knew not where to “ ‘ hide their heads, yet these men were cheerful.’ They did “ honour to religion; and the nation that so justly appreciated “ their merit did honour to itself.”

husband or wife was not eminent for conjugal virtue; for every parental and every domestic merit? Surely, when so much pains are taken to disgrace the Roman Catholic religion, by bringing forward the miserable legends by which some of her silly children have often deformed their accounts of her saints, justice requires that the heroic virtues of those saints should be equally produced. If this be not done, one side only of the question is brought forward, and great injustice done to the Roman Catholic Church;—she glories,—and she justly glories in her saints;

When Milton assigns to the Paradise of Fools,

“Eremites and friars,—

“Black, white and grey, and all their trumpery,”

You tell us that “he has given all, their proper place.”

He has not “given all, their proper place.”—I am surprised that You should cite Milton as an authority on such a point. What place would he have given You and Your brother prebendaries? Read the ribaldry with which he has treated Your prelates?

The friars, whom it pleases You to mention thus contumeliously, were incessantly employed in the service of the poor: in preaching to them, in teaching them their catechism, in attending them on their sick beds, and preparing them for their passage to eternity, in aid of the the curates. Was there an epidemic illness, a fire, or an inundation? friars were sure to be there.

In hospitals, in prisons ; amid the wounded and the dying in the field of battle, friars were always found. Those, who had no other friend, always found one in a friar. Many friars reached the highest eminence in the arts and sciences. Surely you have heard of Father Roger Bacon. The best interpreter of Descartes, was father Mersenne, a minim friar : the best edition of the Principia of Newton, is that of Jacquier and Le Seur, both minims : St. Thomas of Aquin, Bartholomew de las Casas, were Dominican friars, Cardinal Ximenes was a Franciscan. An hundred other friars illustrious for talent, virtue and learning, might be quickly mentioned. Is it decent to call, or to wound the feelings of Catholics by calling, such men, trumpery ?

LETTERS XII. & XIII.

THE REFORMATION.—HENRY VIII.—EDWARD VI.

IN your twelfth letter, you assert, (page 146, 147), that, “the only real points in debate at the time “ of the Reformation, were these;—Are the doc“ trines of the church of Rome supported by “ Scripture and antiquity? Shall the Pope or “ Monarch be supreme over the people?” The first of these points included the question of the Pope’s spiritual supremacy. It was wrested from him, in many parts of Europe, by the Protestant reformers; but these, instead of establishing evangelical liberty, strove, equally by the sword and the pen, to substitute themselves and their creeds, in the chair of authority. Their attempts filled Europe both with war and debate.*

Proceeding in the order of investigation which I have suggested in the letter to which You now refer, You inquire, whether England has been benefitted by the Reformation, I. In Temporal happiness;—II. Spiritual wisdom;—III. Or morals;—IV. And, whether the revival of letters was materially promoted by the Reformation. On each of these topics You conclude for the affirmative.

* See the article in the Edinburgh Review, No. LIII. Art. 8, on the “Toleration of the first Reformers.”

“ Christianity,” you say, “ not Romanism, ex“ tricated us from Paganism.” You have not shown that the Creed of St. Augustine was not.— I have referred to a work, which abundantly shows, by the confessions of Protestant writers of the first eminence, that it was, the creed of the Council of Trent.

You ask, (page 148), “ if your parochial clergy
 “ will not bear comparison with the monks?”—
 The proper persons to whom your parochial clergy should be compared, are the parochial clergy of France. I beg leave to transcribe what I have said of these in another publication.*

“ A French country curate was truly the father
 “ of his flock. There was not in his parish a sub“ ject of joy or distress in which he did not “ feelingly participate.

“ Le pauvre l' allait voir, et revenait heureux.

VOLT. Henriade.

“ Generally speaking, his income was small.
 “ If it fell short of what the French law termed
 “ the portion congrue, about eighteen pounds a “ year of our money, but taking into calculation
 “ the relative value of specie, and the relative “ price of provisions, about sixty pounds a year
 “ of English money, in its present worth, the state “ made good the deficiency. It is evident, that “ with such an income, the curé could spare
 “ little. Whatever it was, he gave it cheerfully, “ thriftily, and wisely ; and the soothing word,

* History of the Church of France, Ch. II. Sect. 3.

“ the compassionate look, the active exertion to “ serve, were never wanting. In the house of “ mourning the curate was always seen; the “ greatest comfort of the aged was to perceive “ him enter their doors. The young never en“ joyed their mirth or pastime so much, as when “ they saw him stand near them and smile. But “ the curé never forgot that he was a minister of “ God. The discharge of his functions, particu“ larly of his sacred ministry at the altar, was at “ once the pride and the happiness of his life.
“ There was scarcely a curate who did not “ thoroughly instruct the children of his parish “ in their catechism, and his whole flock in their “ duties; who did not every Sunday and holiday “ officiate at the morning and evening service;
“ who did not regularly attend his poor parishioners “ through their illnesses, and prepare them, in “ their last moments, for their passage to eternity.
“ The last act of his life, was to commend his “ flock to God, and to beg his blessing on them.
“ In every part of France, the peasant spoke
“ of him as his best friend; ‘Notre bon curé,’
“ was his universal appellation. This is not an “ exaggerated picture of these venerable men.
“ Their merit was at once so transcendent, and “ so universally recognized, as to defy calumny.
“ On every other rank of men, the philosophers
“ and witlings of France exhausted abuse and “ ridicule; but they left untouched the worthy and “ edifying curé. Voltaire himself, in more pas“sages than one of his works, pays due homage

“to their useful and unpretending virtue.”

When You have read this passage, I wish You to say, if the comparison between your and our parochial clergy is unfavourable to the latter?

Against your description of the Pope, (page 148); I absolutely protest.

When you commented (p. 148) on my mention of “the interruption of the night by the psalmody of the monks,” You surely forget that it was an imitation of our Saviour; an imitation also of the son of Jesse, who so often and so feelingly mentions, in his Psalms, “his rising in “midnight, to confess to the Lord.”

XII. & XIII. 1.

Has the Reformation produced an Increase of Temporal Happiness in the Nation.

1.—You next inquire, whether there has been an increase of temporal happiness in the nation, since the era of the reformers. I admit all that can be said of its great advances in agriculture and commerce, and the useful or ornamental arts: but, when I consider its eviscerating national debt, its pauperism, and the numbers exanimated by premature, excessive, consuming and exhausting labour, I greatly doubt its increase in happiness.

XII. & XIII. 2.

Has it produced an Increase of Spiritual Happiness.

2. As to the national increase in spiritual wisdom,—place to our account the superstition, which

You can justly impute to us, and to yours, the actual socinianism, deism, infidelity, and general indifference to religion;—then gravely say, whether You really claim any increase in true religion?

A late Bishop of London *informed us, that “in several parts of his diocese, there were many hundreds of wretched, ignorant young creatures, of both sexes, totally destitute of all education, totally unacquainted with the very first elements of religion, and who perhaps never entered a church.” Mr. Colquhoun † says, “that in the population of England alone, 1,170,000 children, it is much to be feared, grow up to an adult state, without any education at all, and also without any useful impressions of religion or morality. To these are to be added, many of those, who have had the advantage of some education, but in ill-regulated schools, in which proper attention is not given to religious and moral instruction. So that, in the present state of things, it is not too much to say, that every thirty years, (the period assigned for a new generation), at least four millions and a half of adults must, in case a remedy is not applied, mingle in the general population of the kingdom, without any fixed principles of rectitude, and with very little knowledge either of religion or morality.”

* Bishop of London's Charge, 1790, p. 14.

† Colquhoun's New and Appropriate System of Education, p. 72, 73.—And see the Rev. Hugh James Rose's “State of the Protestant religion in Germany.”

“ Even in this country,” says the most excellent Bishop of Durham, * “ there is an almost universal “ lukewarmness and indifference respecting the “ essentials of their religion.” “ The character“ istics of the present times,” says another most distinguished prelate of your church, † “ are con“ fessedly incredulity, and an unprecedented in“ difference to the religion of Christ.”

3. As to the increase of morality, you have not disproved, and I see no reason to alter what is said upon this subject in “ The Book of the Roman Catholic Church.” If you compare the present English morals with the English morals of any æra antecedent to the Reformation, I am convinced you will not find the balance in favour of the present day.

You ask, (page 152), “ If France, Spain, Portugal, or other Romish countries, are more or less moral than Protestant England ?” I have no personal knowledge of any of these countries, except France; but I must observe, that the honour of the Spaniards, and the decency of the Brabanders and Belgians, were proverbial.

Of France, I know much: You will probably be surprised when I say, that before the Revolution, the morality of France was not inferior in any respect to the morality of England. People are too apt to judge of the morality of a country, by the manners and habits of those who generally attract the notice of strangers: these are too often the least respectable portion of the community. Vice courts notice, and tilts at all she meets: virtue seeks retirement, and must be pursued into her retreats to be discovered. To these, English travellers seldom followed her; if they had, they would have found, in every rank of life, a due proportion both of common and exemplary virtue. I request you to peruse the “Essai Historique sur l’Influence de la Religion en France, pendant le dix-neuvieme Siecle, 2 vols. 8vo.”

You will find by it, that France abounded throughout that period, in persons both secular and ecclesiastic, and of each sex, whose virtue was pure, and whose habits were regular and edifying.

At one time this country was the charitable asylum of 8,000 ecclesiastics. How pious, how humble, how unoffending, and, in every account how truly respectable was their demeanour. Our country was also at the same time the receptacle of about 2,000 lay emigrants. How patiently did the great majority of these submit to their severe trial! How cheerfully did the father and the son engage in any occupation, and the mother and the daughter become servants of all work, to increase the family means of subsistence, and render it as comfortable as possible. Surely, persons who have borne adversity so well, must have been “deeply principled in Virtue’s book.”

Nothing could be more beneficent. or more honourable than the conduct both of the British government, and of thousands of British individuals, to these unhappy emigrants. I have transcribed in a note to my preceding letter, what I have written upon it in three of my works: this passage has often been translated into French, and never without an expression of gratitude by the translator to the British nation. In fact, it was a deed,

“Above the Greek, above the Roman name.”

YOUNG.

How pleasing is it to dwell on these themes!

XII. & XIII.

Is the Reviva of Letters owing to the Reformation.

4. What you say upon the diffusion of learning before the Reformation, rather confirms than weakens what I have writtten upon that subject. As an Englishman, I am proud of the names of Bacon, Locke, Newton, Shakespeare, and Milton, which You hold forth to view; but, when in your production of these names, You exult over us, I must observe, that the Church of England cannot claim the Arian Newton, the Socinian Locke, or the Anti-prelatic Milton. Shakespeare was probably a Roman Catholic; his father certainly was.

“You desire me (page 154) to compare the state of knowledge in the countries which are subjected to the influence of Romanism and Pro“testantism.” In a trifling publication * I have inserted a comparison ;—I confess it to be on a very small scale,—of “the writers in the British “æra of literature,” with those of “the æra of “Lewis XIV.” It does not appear to me quite clear, that on a general comparison of the arts, the sciences, and the literature of both territories, the balance would prove so greatly in favour of England, as the English seem to take for granted. All foreigners observe that England possesses her due share of soli-ipsiism.

The state of literature in Spain is truly respectable. † Is there more literature in Sweden, Norway and Denmark? Doctor Clarke, in his travels through Sweden, observes that “the religious controversy in which that state was involved, arrested “the progress of letters for almost a century.”

Permit me to assure You, that Greek literature is “not,” as you assert, “almost extinct in Italy;” and when you write, that “sacred literature has “been little cultivated by the Romanists,”—I read and admire. Rivington’s Catalogue, alone, particularly that part of it which relates to sacred literature, completely confutes this assertion.

Referring you to what I have stated succinctly in my twelfth letter to Doctor Southey, and more at length in my “Essay on the Discipline of the “Church of Rome, respecting the General Perusal

* Reminiscences; XXXI. 3.

† See Capmany Teatro Historico Critico de la Eloquencia Española ;—Bouterwek’s History of Spanish Literature.

“ in the vulgar Tongue by the Laity,” I beg leave to say, that your account of these restraints is unmercifully exaggerated. Having lived long in France, and being well acquainted with the literary and devotional habits of that people, I aver, without the slightest fear of refutation, that the Bible was as much read and understood in France as in England.

I will admit, that it was not read at so early an age in France, as it is by English Protestants. But, absit invidia verbo, I will presume to say, that, taking a Protestant boy of the age of ten years, who has read the Bible in the manner in which it is usually read before that age in England, and a Catholic boy of the same age, who has been taught the French catechism, and particularly “Fleury’s Historical Catechism,” in the manner in which they were usually taught in France, —the latter will be found to have quite as full and as clear a knowledge of the history, the morality, and the religion of the Old and New Testament, as the former.

“ With us, also,” you say, (page 154), “ are the “ editors of the Hebrew text.” Have you not heard of the Polyglots of Alcala, of Antwerp, of Paris? Of the Venitian and Plantinian editions of the Hebrew text? Of those of Xantes Pagninus, and Arias Montanus? Of that of Lewis Biel, a Jesuit? or that of Houbigeant, an oratorian? This cost 35,000 livres, and a volume of it, while I read your astonishing assertion, lay on my table.

LETTER XIV.

QUEEN MARY.

IN this letter You profess to state the grounds upon which I have endeavoured in "The Book of the Roman Catholic Church," to extenuate the persecutions in the reign of Queen Mary.

1.—You say (page 161), that "my apology for the persecutions in the reign of Queen Mary, is derived from considering the former conduct of Cranmer, in passing an unjustifiable law, by which he condemned to death the advocates of the Romish opinions."

This I mention as one extenuating circumstance; but I state others:—1st, The rebellions and treasons against Mary. You admit, (p. 174), that "at the time of Mary's decease, a rebellion was almost raging against her."—2d, The many indignities, some of a very atrocious nature, which were offered to her.—3rd, That there was not, in Mary's time, a Protestant state, in which similar executions for religion had not taken place.—4th, That there scarcely was a primitive reformer, by whom religious persecution was not justified or practised.—5th, And that several persons were executed in the reign of Queen Mary for heresy, who might justly have been executed for treason.

You should also have mentioned my explicit avowal in "The Book of the Roman Catholic Church," "that the sanguinary executions in the reign of Queen Mary cannot be justified."

2.—You say, (p. 162), "I impeach the Church of Rome of the crime of still sanctioning persecution, and thereby maintaining a doctrine which is alike hostile to your own petition for admission to power, and to the common rights and happiness of nations."

This assertion I have completely overthrown in my Ninth Letter to You, and therefore, applying with little alteration to my church, the words, which You apply to Yours, I say, at least upon as good grounds as yourself, that persecution for religion never was a principle of the Roman Catholic church: it was a local error of individuals, which has been removed by gradual improvement. In the church of Rome it never was a law, and has long ceased to be a custom: they are not Catholics who persecute in Switzerland.

3.—You inform us in a note, (page 172), that "Mr. Todd has ably defended Cranmer; and that the character of Latimer, You have no doubt, can be equally vindicated also."

Permit me to think, with Dr. Lingard, that "Doctor Todd's work has disappointed the wishes of his friends;" that "his statements have confirmed the most material of the statements contained in the fourth volume of the Doctor's

“ history,” and that “ a candid comparison will show, that even his objections on points of minor importance are built on slender foundations, and frequently serve to overturn each other.”

4.—You say, “ if the good character which the historian upon whose researches you have relied he correctly represented, how severely do you condemn the religion, which could change a compassionate, liberal, pious, moral, exemplary woman, into a savage, rancorous and bigotted persecutor.—Your efforts are vain—the blood of the martyrs is upon her.

“ And history with her whip of steel

“ Has stamp'd the character of shame so deep,

“ That not eternity shall wear it out.”

Randolph's Muses Looking Glass.

With all that history can justly charge on Mary, she does not merit the atrocious epithets which You bestow upon her, or your application to her of Randolph's atrocious verse. Would not this verse be more justly applied to Elizabeth's conduct towards Mary of Scotland? and to Elizabeth's dissimulations, both before and after the execution of that unfortunate princess?

In pronouncing upon Mary of England, it should not be forgotton, that she was highly provoked, greatly mistaken, and abominably advised: Thus, while her conduct deserves strong reprehension, she is entitled to much pity; and while the reprehensible part of her character is held out in the strongest light, neither her merits, nor the circumstances which extenuate her misdeeds, should be concealed.

But how is the church chargeable with the supposed change in the character of this princess? The first volume of Dodd's Church History contains the faculties and instructions which the Pope gave for reconciling the kingdom to the Holy See. They are written in the language of moderation, and do not contain a single expression which suggests sanguinary measures. The lenity of Cardinal Pole, her majesty's principal adviser, seems to be universally admitted.

LETTER XV.

QUEEN ELIZABETH.

Alleged Omission of any mention of the State of Europe and England, at the Accession of Queen Elizabeth.

IN this letter, I shall successively examine,—

I.—Your remarks upon my alleged omission of any notice of the state of Europe and England, at the accession of Queen Elizabeth :

II.—Your eulogy of the pacific tendency of her first measures respecting religion :

III.—And of the moderation of the penal laws passed in the first year of her reign :

IV.—Your justification of the law passed in the fifth :

V.—And of those passed in the 13th, 23d, and 27th :

VI.—I shall then consider the justice of your denial of the merit of loyalty to the conduct of the Catholics, while the English coast was threatened by the Armada :

VII.—And conclude my letter with some general reflections.

In every part of your present letter You insert reflections injurious to the Catholics ;—to the principal of them, I shall occasionally advert.

XV. 1.

Your Remark upon my alledged Omission of any notice of the State of Europe and England, at the Accession of Queen Elizabeth.

In the beginning of this letter, addressing yourself to me, You say, “ In your examination of the circumstances which accompanied and followed the Reformation, you would almost seem to have demonstrated to your countrymen, that you reserved your talents for your own profession, and your sincerity for the courtesy of private life.”

“ You attempt a long and laborious vindication of the Romanists in the reign of Elizabeth, from the charges of plots and conspiracies against the queen, and her government. You would then endeavour to prove, that the priests who suffered were executed for religion, not for treason. In prosecuting your inquiry upon these points you omit all considerations of the state of parties, and of the difficulties in which the legislature of the day must have been involved, whatever might have been its consequent decisions. You do not tell your readers that civil wars were raging on the Continent, and almost in England, on the subject of religion; that on the Continent, the opposite opinions of the Protestants and the Romanists were embodied in the shape of armies; and that in England, their open collision could only be prevented by the most consummate prudence, and by occasional severities.”

As a complete answer to the personally abusive charge which You bring against me, at the beginning of the extract which I have just transcribed from your work, it would be sufficient to say, that, as both Dr. Southey's work and mine are addressed to the well informed, and as every thing stated by You is fully known to these, there was no obligation upon me to state the facts which You specify, and therefore no ground to criminate me for omitting them : it would have been both a needless and incongruous expansion of my work.

I might also observe, that this most evidently was not offered as a history of the times, but as a defence of the Catholics against certain charges of Dr. Southey.

But I am not reduced to the necessity of resorting to either of these defences. To repel your charges, I shall transcribe an extract from my "Historical Memoirs," and leave it to your own decision, whether the account which You have given, either of the state of Europe, or the state of England, during the reign of Queen Elizabeth, is more full, or more favourable to that princess, than mine. *

"Ancient and modern history differ in nothing
 "so much, as the absence of religious wars and "controversies from the former, and the large "space which they occupy in the latter. During "the successive periods of the Assyrian, Persian,
 "Macedonian and Roman empires, the grand “ political division of the world was, into the states “ within the sway of those powerful empires, and

 “ the states beyond it. At the end of the fifth “ century of the Christian æra, by far the greater “ part of Europe was Roman; but after the “ death of Trajan, the Romans ceased to be con“ querors, and soon afterwards, the barbarians
 “ of the north and the north-east, began to invade “ their territories on every side, and to erect on “ their ruins multitudes of principalities, inde“ pendent on each other, but united by the pro“ fession of a common religion, by a common re“ gard for its interests, and by common sub“ mission, in religious concerns, to the Pope, as “ their common head. By degrees, Austria, “ France, Spain and England, became the Euro“ pean powers of the first order. The union of “ the Imperial and Spanish crowns on the head of “ Charles V. produced confederacies against him.
 “ The French monarch was always at their head;
 “ and Europe thus became divided in two new “ parties, the Austrian and the French. The “ Reformation arrived, and then, according to “ Schiller,* the interests of the European states,
 “ which, till that time, had been national, ceased
 “ to be such, and the interests of religion formed
 “ a bond of union among subjects of different “ governments, who, till this time, had been un“ known to each other. A sentiment more power-

 “ Bonald, in his interesting Essai, ‘ De l’Unité Religieuses en

“ ful in the heart of man, than even the love of “ his country, rendered him capable of perceptions
“ and feelings which reached beyond its limits :
“ the French Calvinist found himself more in “ contact with England, Germany, Holland
“ or Geneva, than with a Catholic of his own “ country.

“ This effected a new political division in “ Europe ; France siding with the separatists from “ the Church of Rome, and introducing to the “ aid of their common cause the Ottoman power,
“ became the real head of one power ; Austria
“ was the head of the other. But when, upon
“ the abdication of Charles the Fifth, his German “ were divided from his Spanish territories, and
“ the civil wars of France weakened his connections
“ with the Protestant powers and the Porte,
“ Philip the Second of Spain, and Elizabeth
“ of England, became the conspicuous characters.
“ Philip, with the aid of Bavaria, was the centre “ of the Catholic system : Elizabeth, with the “ United Provinces at her disposition, was at the “ head of the Protestant. During this period, “ Germany, under the peaceable influence of Ru“ dolph, took no part in the contest ; but all the “ temporal, and (which was of much greater con“ sequence) all the spiritual power of Rome, co-“ operated with the Spaniard, and placed the Pope
“ in the van of the Catholic array. Then, if “ Schiller’s remarks be just, the Protestants in “ every country subject to the Spanish sway,
“ would be partisans of Elizabeth, and every “ Catholic in the territories subject to her do“ minion or controul, would be favourable to the “ designs of Philip and the Pope. Pursuing his “ reasoning, it would follow that this would be “ particularly the case of the clergy of each di“ vision, on account of their nearer interests in the “ concerns of religion ; and still more the case of “ the Catholic clergy, on account of their intimate “ connection with the Roman See, and graduated “ dependence upon her.”

You tell me, (p. 185), that, “ You use my own “ words when you add, that Elizabeth’s religious “ reformation seems to have been conceived on a “ conciliatory and comprehensive scheme.” You refer to my Historical Memoirs, Vol. I. p. 145 and page 234, of the 2d edition. No such expression is to be found in the pages to which you refer : neither is any such expression applied as you apply it, to the general character of Elizabeth’s religious reformation, to be found in any of my writings.

XV. 2.

Your Eulogy of the Pacific Tendency of Elizabeth’s first measures respecting Religion.

PERMIT me to ask, if, while You brought forward, in this and other parts of your work, the persecution of Protestants by Catholics in foreign countries, You should not have equally brought into view the persecutions of Catholics by Protestants?
 Justice required it of You. I beg leave to refer

You to what I have said upon this subject, in the fifth section of my fifteenth letter to Doctor Southey, and to Doctor Milner's fourth letter to Doctor Sturges. If You compare the different persecutions, either in the provocations of them, or in their length, or their atrocity, You will not find the Catholics more guilty than the Protestants.

Let us now inquire, whether the persecuting laws of Queen Elizabeth, speaking of them generally, can be justified upon any general principles of morality and civil justice.

1.—At the time of the accession of Queen Elizabeth, the Roman Catholic was the national religion. Two-thirds of the nation professed it; all the bishops, both houses of convocation, and both the universities, protested against the introduction of the Protestant creed. The remaining third part of the nation, but divided into the episcopalian and puritan denominations, favoured Protestantism. Elizabeth herself was, or at least professed herself to be, an episcopalian Protestant.

In this situation of things, did any general principles of morality and justice confer a right upon Elizabeth and her government, to make episcopalian Protestantism the religion of the state?

Here, the relative merits of the two religions are beside the question: the only point to be considered is, whether morality and justice allowed Queen Elizabeth to make episcopalian Protestantism the state religion, against the will of an immense majority of her subjects?

You must, I suppose, maintain the affirmative ;
—I maintain the negative.

2.—Admitting, however, for the sake of argument, that the overturning of the national religion of the country, and the substitution of a new religion, contrary to the wish of a great majority of the population, was moral and just, did morality and justice make it the right of Elizabeth and her government, to enact, that the adherence of two-thirds of her subjects to the ancient religion of their country, was a crime against the state ; and that every exercise by them of their hereditary religion, and even mere non-conformity to the new ritual, was, upon that account, highly criminal, and should therefore be punished by heavy legislative inflictions ?

If it was not moral and just, Elizabeth's legislation against her Roman Catholic subjects, was wicked and barbarous in the extreme.

Converting the case,—that is,—supposing the government to be Roman Catholic, and the majority of the nation to be Protestant, would similar laws be justifiable ?

If You answer in the negative, You are bound to produce some acknowledged general principle that justifies your answer :—I aver that no such general principle can be produced.

I agree, with Father Persons, * that “ Neither

* Judgment of a Catholic living in banishment for his religion, &c. 8vo. 1608.

“ breathing, nor the use of common ayre, is more “ due unto Roman Catholics, or common to all,
 “ than ought to be libertie of conscience to “ christian men, whereby each man liveth to “ God and himself; and without which, he “ struggleth with the torment of all-continual lin“ gering death.”

THIS IS MY CREED; and it is a great satisfaction to me to reflect, that, having advocated Catholic Emancipation during half a century, I never advocated it on any ground that was not applicable to every denomination of dissidents from a state religion.

3.—But, let us advance further, and admit that Queen Elizabeth being, as I unequivocally admit and believe her to have been, sovereign of the country, both in fact and in right, did morality and justice allow her and her government, to consider it a notorious fact, that all her subjects, who professed the Roman Catholic religion, and therefore acknowledged the spiritual supremacy of the Pope, were from this circumstance alone, deficient in true allegiance to her; and that, on this account, both morality and justice sanctioned legislative provisions which, on the mere proof of their acknowledging the Pope’s spiritual supremacy, or even refusing to swear to the Queen’s spiritual supremacy, and without requiring the slightest evidence of their having committed any one act which the ancient law of the realm made criminal, subjected them to the horrible penalties of treason.

You maintain the affirmative ;—I maintain the negative.

I hope I have not mistaken Your opinions. What I have said leads to the inquiry, whether the acknowledgment of the Pope's spiritual supremacy is inconsistent with true allegiance ? This must depend upon the nature of the spiritual supremacy which Catholics ascribe to him. It consists in the right of the church, and of the Pope as its head, to preach and teach those doctrines, which Catholics hold to have been preached and taught by Christ ; and to punish the refractory members of the church, by spiritual censures, and ultimately by excommunication. Is this inconsistent with a subject's duty of allegiance ? It does not deny the temporal sovereignty of the monarch, or his right to enforce it by any mode of temporal power.

These, both you and I equally recognise in the sovereign.

Has the monarch any power, merely spiritual ?

Neither You nor I believe that he has.

Then, in what did the allegiance of a Catholic, and the allegiance of a Protestant really differ, in the reign of Queen Elizabeth ?

Does not every Protestant communion assert the spiritual independence of her church ? Does this claim trench on their allegiance ?

4.—Popes, it may be said, have carried their pretensions to an iniquitous length : they have pretended to discharge subjects from their allegiance ; and some subjects have been swayed by them to a dere-

fiction of their duty. Of this, You produce unquestionable instances; You also cite many writers who have advocated these pretensions.

I answer,—1st, That it has, at all times, and by every portion of Roman Catholics, been allowed, that the Pope's title to these rights is no article of the faith of the Roman Catholics:—2dly, that the claim of the Popes to them, has been repeatedly called into question, and contested with them in all cisalpine and many transalpine territories:—and 3dly, that all Protestant churches have advanced the same pretensions, and have incalculably oftener, carried them into execution. What millions of subjects in France, Spain, Germany, and the Low Countries, have not Protestants, in support of these pretensions, drawn from their allegiance? How many Catholic thrones have they prostrated?

5—Then, talk not to me of its following from a subject's being a Catholic, that his allegiance to a Protestant king cannot be depended upon, unless You admit, that it also follows, from a subject's being a Protestant, that his allegiance to a Catholic king is equally insecure.

Wait, I say, in each case, till a criminal act shall be done by the dissident, before You fix guilt upon an individual: Wait, I say, till numerous criminal acts shall be done by these dissidents, before You fix guilt upon the body.

In the time of the Commonwealth, when episcopalian Protestantism was proscribed,—did it follow, that every episcopalian Protestant was a traitor to "the powers that were?" Was it moral or just, that his absenting himself from the religious service of the state, should be considered, standing singly, a deed of treason, and punished as treason? What should we now say of the French government, if it required all its Protestant subjects to acknowledge the spiritual supremacy of the Pope, and attend the church service of their parishes, under penalties similar to those prescribed by the laws of Elizabeth?

I should consider it detestable:—So to consider it, is perfectly congruous with my principles.

Consider the enormous length, to which, if You justify Elizabeth's persecuting laws, Your proposition must go. It follows inevitably, that there never has been, and that there does not, at this time, exist a case, in which, if a sovereign and a proportion of his subjects are of different religions, the sovereign is not justified in enacting legislative provisions, which make any exercise of their religion, however otherwise harmless and indifferent, felony or treason to the state, and punishable accordingly.

Beyond this, religious tyranny cannot go: to its whole length the statutes of Elizabeth and, if You justify them, Your justification of them proceeds.

Thus, the conclusions which You draw against the Roman Catholics, from their refusal of the oath of supremacy, and in favour of Elizabeth's penal code against them, fall altogether to the ground.

XV. 3.

Your Eulogy of the Moderation of the Laws passed in the first year of the Reign of Queen Elizabeth.

1.—You premise your observations (p. 188) on the sanguinary and penal code of Elizabeth, by affirming that “its laws were all passed in consequence of the danger of the state, of some hostile proceeding on the part of foreign powers, or some discovery of treason on the part of her own subjects.”

These lines contain, speaking generally, all the substance of your present chapter, and thus call for particular attention.

1.—With respect to the hostile proceedings of foreign powers towards Elizabeth, You are entirely silent on the hostile proceedings of Elizabeth towards them;—to the rebellions which she fomented in France, the Netherlands, Holland and Scotland; to her plunders and piracies in the West Indies, South America, and on our own sea; to the capture of the Spanish treasure galleon, when wrecked on our coast. Much of this took place in the time of professed peace, and was therefore a breach of inter-national law.

2.—These hostile proceedings of foreigners, supposing them such as You describe them, prove nothing against the Catholic subjects of Queen Elizabeth, unless you prove that these co-operated in them. You have not produced, and I defy you to produce, a single instance of this cooperation, which fixes guilt upon the Catholic body.

3.—As to the discovery of treason among her own subjects :—If you mean, in this place by treason, those acts which were treasonable by the antient laws and constitution of the country, I affirm, most positively, that nothing of the kind has been or can be proved against the Catholic subjects of Elizabeth, which inculpates the general body, or even what may be called a proportion of them.

4.—I will add, that if all the treasons charged upon them were true, the number of Catholics whom they would affect is so small, that effrontery itself would not dare to charge them upon the whole body.

5.—The great question between us is,—Did justice and morality render it lawful for Elizabeth to make the creed and liturgy of the smallest religious denomination of her subjects the creed and liturgy of the state; to spoliage the antient clergy of their possessions, and transfer them to the new establishment; to legislate that the non-conformists to it should be delinquents in the various gradations of misdemeanour, felony, and treason, and punishable in the various gradations of fine, confiscation, imprisonment and death?

This leads to the following and very important consideration:—Did not candour, and even perspicuity require, that whenever You brought the charge of treason against the Catholic body, or Catholic individuals, You should have explained, whether the treason with which You professed to charge them, was that which was treason under the subsisting law of the realm ; or that which never was treason till Elizabeth's Draconian laws made it such. By not attending to this, You frequently, and often very injuriously to the Roman Catholics, mislead your readers.

6.—Thus all the ground upon which You attempt to advocate the sanguinary code of Elizabeth, fails You. But to proceed, —

I have frequently considered the nature of the supremacy conferred upon Queen Elizabeth by this act of the first year of her reign : I have given the result to the public, in my Historical Memoirs of the English, Irish and Scottish Catholics.*

It appears to me clear, that, if the act conferring it, ascribed explicitly and unequivocally temporal sovereignty only, to the queen and her successors, and if the clauses in it which deny the supremacy of the Pope, had denied his temporal power only, the oath would have been unobjectionable, and have been taken universally, or at least with a very trifling exception, by the whole Catholic body.

But the oath went much further. Agreeing in nothing else, Hume, † and Mr Neale ‡ assert, to use the words of the former, that “ Elizabeth “ always pretended, that, in quality of supreme † Ch. XL.

‡ Ch. IV.

“ head of the church, she was fully empowered
“ to decide all questions which might arise with “ regard to doctrine, discipline, and worship; and “ would never allow her parliament so much as
“ to take these points into consideration.” Mr.
Neale’s arguments “ that the act was intended to “ confer on the Queen some powers, merely “ spiritual, and belonging of right to the church,” appear to me incontrovertible.

It could not therefore be taken, either by the Catholics or the Puritans : even the party afterwards denominated the High Church, could not take it consistently with their own principles : Would you assign to George IV. the spiritual prerogative claimed by Elizabeth, and generally allowed to be assigned to her by this oath ?

You know that the oath was altered at the Revolution ; that then, the assertion of the spiritual supremacy of the Crown was expunged, and the denial of any foreign supremacy substituted for it. Was not this an unequivocal admission, that the disbelief of the spiritual supremacy of the Crown, for which Roman Catholics and Puritans had in such numbers, and for so great a length of time, been persecuted, was perfectly consistent with the allegiance of English subjects ?

7.—You next proceed to the Common Prayer. It is now considered, and from the beginning was considered, to contain several things contrary to the doctrine of the Roman Catholic church. This can admit of no doubt.

No Roman Catholic could therefore conscientiously attend a church, in which the ritual of the Common Prayer was used.

By the act of the first of Elizabeth, those who absented themselves from their parish churches, were liable to a forfeiture of one shilling to the poor, for every Lord's day in which they so absented themselves; if they continued their absence for a month together, they were liable to a forfeiture of 20*l.* to the king; and if they kept in their own house any inmate guilty of such absence, they were to forfeit 10*l.* for every such inmate. Every fourth Sunday was understood to complete the month: thus, thirteen months were, in relation to those penalties, supposed to complete the year. "Strange and severe," You say, (p. 193), "as those laws now must be considered, great progress in liberality had evidently been made by their comparative mildness. That it must be remembered is the only point which it is now necessary to prove. The payment of one shilling, or twenty pounds, was not so terrible as fire and faggot. No prince in Europe at this time defended or sanctioned the laws respecting religion, with penalties so mild as these." A previous admission of your own shows your last assertion to be unfounded. In page 186, You inform us, that "in Germany the treaty of Passaw had given to both parties a temporary repose." But in this view which You give of the case, two important circumstances, wholly passed over by You, must be taken into consideration. In every other state of Europe, the religion which the sovereign defended or sanctioned, was the antient religion of the kingdom; and the numerical proportion of those against whom it was to be so defended or sanctioned, was very small. Two-thirds of the English nation were, at Elizabeth's accession to the throne, Roman Catholics; and their's was both the antient and the actual religion of the country. Now, to consign by one legislative provision, two-thirds of a nation to fire and faggot, was impossible. I cannot therefore give Elizabeth as much credit as You do for abstaining from this attempt, or think it proves an increase of liberality. What she could not do, she did not; what she could do, she did: she consigned two-thirds of her subjects for adhering to the antient and actual religion of the country, to degradation, vexation, want, beggary and inanition.

According to the best calculations, money, in the time of Elizabeth, was between three and four times its value in the present time. Taking it at the lowest of those values, one Sunday's absence from church subjected the delinquent by the laws of Elizabeth to a forfeiture of three shillings; a month's absence, to a forfeiture of 60*l.*; a year's, to a forfeiture of 780*l.* of our money. Is it possible to justify those inflictions? to consider the sure and certain consequence of them without horror? The immediate operation of them was to spoli-ate the nobility and higher gentry of a portion of their rents, which they could ill afford to spare ; to reduce the commoners to yeomen ; the yeomen, to labourers ; and the labourers, to helots.*

But,—what language can adequately describe the barbarity of Elizabeth's religious legislation in respect to CATHOLIC IRELAND, immediately after her accession to the throne?—Her spiritual supremacy was required to be professed by all the nation,—a nation, which consisted wholly of Roman Catholics,—under the successive penalties of a forfeiture of all the party's real, and all his personal estate,—of premunire, and the punishment of traitors by death and embowelment alive. Absence from the Protestant service was punishable by a forfeiture of 12*d.* for each offence,—equal, at that time, in Ireland, to 10*s.* of our present money. The service was to be read in the English language, then wholly unintelligible to the Irish people ;—but with liberty to the clergyman, if he should think proper, to read it in Latin, a language equally unintelligible to all but the clergy. Is this the legislation of a princess, whose tolerating principles and mildness, and of councillors whose wisdom and justice You so highly eulogize? Does history record an instance of intolerance equally savage?—You, however, mention with applause (page 193) “ the calm, sober, and reflecting mind ” which contrived them, and its “ comparative mildness.”

XV. 4.

The Act of the fifth year of Queen Elizabeth against the Roman Catholics.

1. I acknowledge, as I have done more than once in my writings, that this act was caused by the bull of Pius V. and that this bull cannot be mentioned in too strong terms of condemnation.

But “the bull was never received by the English Catholics, nor published nor even signified to them by any legal or canonical method. They continued their allegiance to Queen Elizabeth, acknowledged her title, prayed for her, fought for her, and were, upon all occasions, ready to support her civil rights. They knew the deposing power was not the doctrine of the Catholic Church, but only of some Popes and particular divines, whose opinions and practices they were not chargeable with.”* It was the same in respect to foreign Catholics;—“The bull of Paul III. against Henry VIII. and that of Pius V. against Elizabeth, were,” says Bossuet,† “waste paper, despised by the heretics, and in truth by the Catholics. Treaties, alliances, commerce, every thing, in a word, went on as before, and the Popes knew this would happen: still, the court of Rome, though aware of the inutility of their decrees, would publish them with the view of acquiring a chimerical title.”

* Dodd's Church History, Vol. II. p. 51.

† Defense de la Declaration du Clergé de France, Livre IV. ch. 23.

Cardinal Allen, and Watson, the bishop of Llandaff, the last surviving Catholic prelate, disapproved even the excommunication, and wished that "the whole business had been left to God."*

† Soon after the promulgation of the bull of Pius, the following quere was put, and the following answer to it given:—"Whether Queen Elizabeth was divested of the kingdom by the deposing bull of Pius V.?—Or, by any other sentence passed or to be passed?—Or her subjects discharged from their allegiance?"—It was answered, that "Notwithstanding the bull, or any other declaration, or sentence of the Pope passed or to be passed, we hold Queen Elizabeth to be the lawful queen of England and Ireland, and that obedience and fealty is justly due to her, as such, by all her English and Irish subjects.

* Caron's Remonstrantia Hibernorum contra Lovanienses ultramontan asque censuras, Ch. V. s. 6.

Father Caron also mentions, that the Apology for the Catholics, printed at Douay, and presented to James I. in 1604, declared, that “ those prelates held themselves to be ready for the defence of the queen, to expose and oppose themselves with all their strength to any external power, whether of the Pope or procured by the Pope.”

2. You attribute (page 96) the refusal of the Roman Catholics to attend the Protestant service in the parish churches to the bull.

“ Now began,” you say, (p. 199), “ the suspicion of treason: If the people of England, or any part of them, could obey one part of the Pope’s bull, because they considered their obedience to him an act of religion; on what principle could the queen and her government infer that her subjects would not obey also the other parts of the bull. If to please God, to preserve their religious peace, and to obey the Pope, they absented themselves from their parish churches, why should they hesitate to put in force the sentence of deposition, which was commanded by the same authorities? Hitherto the recusancy of the Puritan and Romanists was a civil offence, they rejected only conformity in religious matters which the Queen wished to establish. Now their recusancy became a political crime, for they openly obeyed the public enemy of the queen her government.”

All this is a mere fancy-piece. The Roman Catholics did not absent themselves from the Protestant service in consequence of the bull of Pope Pius V. This wretched instrument was issued in 1570. Now the decree of the Trentine doctors,* which declared the attendances of Catholics at the Protestant service to be unlawful, was promulgated in 1562, eight years before the papal bull was issued; and it is quite clear, that long before its promulgation, the majority of the Roman Catholics used to absent themselves from the Protestant service. See then how unjust is your assertion (page 199), that “the Romanists generally frequented their parish churches till they were forbidden to do so by the same bull which deposed their sovereign;” and how baseless all the conclusions are which you draw from it.

You ask me (page 196), “whether I should have condemned the king and parliament of England, if they had required the subject to deny the authority of the Pretender, or the Bourbons, or Napoleon, or any other open enemy to the state?”

Certainly not: Nor should I have condemned Elizabeth, if she had required the most ample and explicit profession of allegiance from her Roman Catholic subjects;—or had required from them to deny, in the most ample and explicit terms, allegiance of any kind to the Pope;—or the most ample and explicit denial of the Pope’s temporal authority;

* Dodd’s Church History, Vol. II. p. 24, 44, 292. Hist. Mem. Vol. I. p. 310.

—or the most ample and explicit denial of his right to any spiritual authority in this country, that conflicted with the allegiance of subjects to their sovereign, or with any other political, civil or moral duty.

You then ask me (p. 197), “if the Pope governed the consciences only of the Romanists?”—I answer, that, whatever was his authority, he governed their consciences only.

3. “The Jacobin and the Romanist,” you say (p. 197), “were the avowed enemies of England; both excited the nations of Europe against its sovereign; both were supported by large numbers of the people, among whom will always be found thousands and tens of thousands who hate the existing government, whatever be its form, principle, or excellence.”

Both in my “Historical Memoirs,” and my Letters to Dr. Southey, I have acknowledged, with the late Rev. Charles Plowden,* that a few, but only a few Catholics were led astray by this bull and its advocates, from their allegiance.—The number of them it is at this time impossible to calculate with any thing like a near approach to precision; but I am confident it was small.

But the Catholics were not as you call them (p. 197), enemies of England. They remained firm in their allegiance, true to God; and true to their queen.

* In his “Remarks on a book intituled Memoirs of Gregorio Panzani”: the whole passage is transcribed in the “Historical Memoirs,” Vol. I. p. 415.

XV. 5.

Your Justification of the Acts passed in the 13th, 23d, and 27th years of the Reign of Queen Elizabeth, against the Roman Catholics.

1.—Let me now ask,” (p. 206),—thus you interrogate me—“ can it be considered a religious “ persecution?”

I answer,—that it must be considered a religious persecution.

2.—“ Was not”—You continue to inquire,— “ the queen justified in passing severe laws against “ those, who asserted that she was not a lawful “ sovereign ; who arrayed against her the religious “ principles of one half her people ; were not those “ who brought in the bulls or mandates of this “ avowed political enemy of England rightly con- “ demned of high treason.”

I answer—that Elizabeth was justified in passing severe laws against those, who asserted that she was not a lawful sovereign ;—or who arrayed against her the religious principles of half her people ;—or who brought into this kingdom the bull of Pius, or any other papal bull which was of the same effect, or impeached in the slightest manner the title of the queen. — All, who committed these acts were guilty of high-treason. But of such acts the Catholics in England were innocent : and I must add, that, according to every divine and human law, these acts should have been proved by legal evidence, against the parties accused of them, before they were found guilty ; there scarcely is an instance,—even one I believe cannot be found,—in which the deed was proved ; I will not say by legal, but even by reasonable evidence.

3.—You say (page 202), “ That there would be “ again, men, who would be ready to disclaim “ every tie, and sacrifice life itself, in obedience to “ the supposed will of God, in submission to their “ priesthood, and to their spiritual lord, the Pope :”
If you mean, by these words, to insinuate that,—if, UNDER ANY POSSIBLE CIRCUMSTANCES, a similar bull should now be promulgated, and the Catholic subjects of his Majesty required to obey it, their conduct would be such as you suggest,—I most solemnly aver, that the universal body of the Catholics—that every Catholic—would laugh at such a bull in scorn, and consider it, not as the voice of God, but as the voice of the evil one. I call upon You to mention a single word or deed of any of your Roman Catholic countrymen, that warrants your suggesting such a supposition. I am in perfect astonishment that, in the nineteenth century, so groundless an accusation should be urged.

4.—Referring to the passage, which I have cited from my “ Historical Memoirs,” you say (page 207), “ We, the simple, the bigotted, and illiberal “ Protestants, who still believe that our ancestors “ were men of wisdom, and had sufficient reason to “ pass their various enactments against the Ro“ manists, are curious to know, what epithet is “ applied by a modern, candid, liberal and dis-“ bigotted Romanist to these bulls. The effect “ of the Pope’s decrees would have been to plunge

 “ this country into the most fierce and sanguinary “ civil war, which this or any other country had “ ever witnessed. They deposed the sovereign,
 “ and excised treason in the subject. They substi“ tuted rebellion for loyalty, and Romanism for “ religion. The Protestant would perhaps use “ strange and uncourteous epithets against them ;
 “ they would appear to him savage, shameful,
 “ abominable and detestable. But the liberal “ Romanist avoids all those bigotted phrases, and “ calls the bulls illaudable ;—yes, — they are “ illaudable!!! they cannot be quite approved ;
 “ on the contrary, they deserved censure. Oh!
 “ spirit of the martyrs !”

Thus You attempt to hold me out to ridicule, and to what is worse.

But, what have I really said of this bull ?

In my “ Historical Memoirs,” I say of the bull,—

“ That, it is ever to be condemned and “ lamented ;

“ That, the Pope assumed by it, a right, the “ exercise of which Christ had explicitly dis-“ claimed for himself ;

“ That, it tended to produce a civil war between “ the queen’s Protestant and Catholic subjects,
 “ with all the horrors of a disputed succession ;

“ That it necessarily involved a multitude of “ respectable and conscientious individuals in the “ bitterest and most complicated distress :”

I ask, “ what could have fascinated the Pon-“ tiff, otherwise virtuous and pious, as all histo“ rians describe him, into the adoption of such a “ measure ?”

I call it, “ a proceeding, which could not but “ irritate the queen and all her subjects, whether “ Catholics or Protestants, who were attached to “ her by affection or a sense of duty.”

In my fifteenth Letter to Dr. Southey, (p. 267),
 I observe to him, that “ he cannot express himself
 “ of it, and the renewal of it by Sixtus Quintus,
 “ in stronger terms of condemnation, than I have “ used in my Historical Memoirs ;”

In a former letter (p. 29), I have cited from my Revolutions of the Germanic Empire, and my Historical Memoirs, my opinions of the claim of the Popes to temporal power, and the acts by which they attempted to enforce those claims, among which I mention expressly and particularly the bull of Pius v :—I call the claims unfounded,— impious,—hostile to the peace of the world,—extravagant and visionary ;—I call them enormities, and one of the greatest misfortunes that ever happened to Christianity.

What stronger words of reprobation of the Bull could be found ?

But, if all this was wanting, your representations of my language would still be most inexcusable, as the real meaning of the word "illaudable," is immeasurably different from that which You ascribe to it. Milton thus uses it—

“ Strength from truth divided, and from just,
“ Illaudable, nought merits but dispraise.”

Besides,—when You wrote the passage in question, were You not fully aware, that I alluded to the celebrated verse of Virgil,

“ Aut illaudati nescit Busiridis aras?”

And that Aulus Gellius, Heyné, and all the commentators, justify Virgil's application of the word "illaudati" to the detestable Busiris, by its being a word, denoting infamy ;—a word which describes “ a person never to be named, never to be recorded; “ unworthy of any mention.”

5. You then mention, (p. 209), the massacre at Paris on St. Bartholomew's-day, and the approbation of it by Pope Gregory.—Permit me to say, with Doctor Milner, *—“ As to the horrid deed “ itself of blood and perfidy, I will not at- “ tempt to justify it, as the king, the queen “ dowager, and their ministers did, at the time, “ when it happened, by pretending that the Hu- “ guenots were on the point of executing a plot to “ destroy them, and to overturn the government ; “ because it is now clear from history, that no such “ plot existed at that particular time. I will not “ even extenuate its atrociousness by expatiating on “ the two real conspiracies of Amboise and Meaux, “ for seizing on the very king and his court, and for

* Letters to a Prebendary, Letter IV.

“ subverting the constitution of their country, which
“ the Calvinists had actually attempted to execute ;
“ or on the four pitched battles, which they had “ fought against the armies of this their sovereign ;
“ or on their treachery in delivering up Havre de “ Grace, the key of the kingdom, into the hands of “ a foreign potentate, queen Elizabeth ; or even upon “ the massacres, with which they themselves had “ previously inundated all France. So far from “ this, I am ready to exclaim with Thuanus, or with “ yourself, in contemplating the horrors of St. Bar-“ tholomew’s-day, Excidat illa dies ævo nec postera
“ credant sæcula.”——If I were satisfied that “ Gregory XIII. had approved of the foul deed of “ St. Bartholomew’s day, after having viewed it in “ the same clear and steady light, in which you and “ I behold it, now that the clouds of royal calum“ ny in which it was invested have been dis“ persed, I should not even then, think that perse“ cution was proved to be an article of his faith,
“ but I should judge him to have partaken of “ Charles’s and Catherine’s sanguinary disposition,
“ in opposition to the character which historians
“ have stamped upon him. But you will recollect
“ the infinite pains which the French king took by “ letters, ambassadors, rejoicings, and medals, to “ make both his subjects and foreign princes, but “ most of all, the Pope believe, that, in killing the Hu“ guenots, he had only taken a necessary measure
“ of self-defence to preserve his own life, together “ with the constitution and religion of the kingdom.

“ If we admit these accounts to have been believed “ at Rome and Madrid, as there is every reason to “ suppose they actually were, the rejoicings at “ these courts will put on a very different appear“ ance from that in which you exhibit them.”

6. You assert, (p. 212, note), that “ Doctor
 “ Lingard, with the utmost unfairness, takes no “ notice of the approbation which his party gave “ to the massacre, when they supposed it to be “ a religious action.” Neither is any notice taken of this approbation by Hume or Carte. Why then do You infame Doctor Lingard for his not mentioning it?

7. Proceeding through your pages, I reach the 229th, in which You say, “ It is not a matter “ either of curiosity or of exultation to me, or to “ any Protestant, to observe the deplorable attempts
 “ which you have so uselessly made to reconcile
 “ this petition of Father Campian, and the dispensa- “ tion for his temporary obedience, with the asserted
 “ perfect loyalty of the Romanists at this period.”
 Now, so far from attempting “ to reconcile the “ petition of Father Campian, and the dispensa“ tion for his temporary obedience, with the loyalty
 “ of the Roman Catholics,” I have unequivocally condemned in severe terms both the petition and the dispensation. In my “ Historical Memoirs
 “ of the English, Irish and Scotish Catholics,”*
 I say,—“ The dispensation has been termed a “ mitigation of the bull of Pius ; now, in respect
 “ to Elizabeth and her heretical subjects, it scarcely deserves this description ; and, as it recognises the principle of the bull of Pius, and suspends the action of it only, till circumstances made an execution of it feasible, it was scarcely less reprehensible than the bull itself ; still it quieted some scruples and had something of a pacific tendency." Surely, after applying to the bull the terms I have applied to it, an intimation that " the dispensation was scarcely less reprehensible than the bull itself," is so far from an attempt to reconcile it with loyalty, that it is an unequivocal condemnation in the harshest terms of its disloyalty.

8. In page 200, you mention " the insurrection of the Earls of Northumberland and Westmorland, to depose the queen." Their insurrection was treason ; but, You have omitted to mention that they acknowledged the title of the queen to the throne ;—and, which is of much greater consequences,—You wholly conceal, what I shall mention, from Camden, the queen's eulogising historiographer, that " the two earls sent letters to the Papists all around the kingdom, and advised them to come to their assistance ; but so far were they from joining with them, that most of them sent the letters which they had received, with the bearers of them, to the queen. Every one strove who should be most forward in the tender of his service, and the offer of his purse and person towards reducing the rebels."

9. " You inquire," (p. 210), thus you address yourself to me,—“ Whether the order given by the “ episcopalian government of Scotland, to massacre

 “ the non-conforming Presbyterians, the massacre
 “ at Glencowe, Munster, &c. &c. &c. proved the “ principle of assassination to be the principle of “ the Protestant Church? Certainly not;” You answer, “ for this doctrine,” You say, “ was never “ taught by our council or creed.”

Never, never was this doctrine taught by the councils or creeds of the Roman Catholic Church.
 The 3d canon of the 4th council of Lateran, is your only stay for your assertion of the contrary;
 and that canon I have annihilated.

Did not the supreme head of your church, did not all your Lords Spiritual sanction every persecuting act which has been passed in this kingdom, against the Roman Catholics and Puritans? Did not some of your Lords Spiritual regularly attend the sittings of the High Commission? What greater sanction has any church given to religious persecution? Why do you force me to mention these things? I most seriously wish,—and You know that I have often and often expressed my wish, that these lamentable scenes should be forgotten? Why do Doctor Southey and You keep the remembrance of them alive?

10. The inhuman act of the 27th of Elizabeth has your entire approbation: She banished, by your account, the priests, on the discovery of a plot framed by the Pope, the King of Spain, and the Duke of Guise, to invade England.—You produce no evidence of the plot, and I am sure no evidence can be produced, which proves that the English Catholics were engaged in it. "It is true," say You, (p. 223), "that the Romanists, by the exile of their priests, would be left without ministers of religion; but the kingdom would lose its disturbers, and the queen her traitors. Which alternative was the Government to prefer?"

Now, Sir, permit me most solemnly to request You,—to come forward, and to produce all the evidence which You have in your power, to prove that the priests who resided in England at the time when this act was passed, (for those only it concerns), were traitors;—that any treasonable practices were then carrying on by them;—that any of them attempted to execute Pope Pius's execrable bull; brought it into the kingdom; circulated it; propounded its lawfulness, or, in any other manner, was art or part in it; or, in any other act inconsistent with the warmest loyalty, with the most perfect allegiance. Deal not in generals; name the individuals You charge; specify the act with which You charge them; produce Your proofs of the charge. Then and then only You will be entitled to a hearing. When a charge is made, and a flat denial of it given, no regard can be shown to it, until it is proved.—Here then we stand;—You say the priests of whom we are speaking, were traitors for engaging in the plot You mention: I flatly deny the assertion;—I say, THEY WERE NOT ENGAGED IN THE PLOT, and demand your proofs. Nothing of the kind was proved, either against Mr. Mayne or Mr. Tregon,—(Tregian). The latter was a layman, and was not executed. So defective was the evidence against the former, that, to induce the jury to find him guilty, Mr. Justice Manhood, who tried him, alleged to the jury, “that, when plain proof was “wanting, strong presumptions ought to take “place.”*

11. In page 218, You mention what is called Throckmorton's treason, in terms which appear to import, that his guilt admitted of no doubt. Does not Dr. Robertson † declare explicitly, that “many “circumstances appear to be remote from truth, “and even from probability.” “It is strange” says Carte, ‡ “that the jury should find him guilty “upon such an extorted confession, part of which “was certainly false.” The general opinion of his innocence was at the time extremely great. To counteract its impression, Government caused “An Account of Francis Throckmorton's Treason” to be published. “But notwithstanding the vast art,” says Guthrie,§ “with which it was written, it will “be difficult for any gentleman of the law, to “discover upon what evidence Throckmorton was “convicted; if he takes from the queen's council

“ the advantage of his own confession when on “ the rack.” The late Lord Auckland* points out the barbarous irregularities of Throckmorton’s trial, and uses them to prove his general position, that “ in the progress of his trial the prisoner was,
 “ in these times, exposed to such dangers, as left “ him but little security, even in the strictest in“ nocence.” On all this you are quite silent.

Dr. Parry’s tale is too ridiculous for discussion.

12. You then travel into foreign countries; but, according to your custom, while You mention the cruelties exercised by Catholics on Protestants,
 You are wholly silent on those exercised by Protestants on Catholics.—Justice required of You, either to mention, or to be silent upon both. In the same manner, You give us a list of regicidal writers of the Catholic communion; are they less numerous or less atrocious than Buchannan, Knox, Milton, Wilcox, Goodman, and several other
 Protestant advocates for regicide?

13. In page 221, You cite bishop Taylor, for saying that “ the statute against the priests were “ not passed till after much evidence, both by the “ confession of the same priests themselves, and “ diverse lay persons,—that many of them at least “ came into England to instigate the loyal to the “ execution of the bull. This appears from the trial “ of Mayne the Jesuit, and Mr. Tregon, who were “ executed at Launceston for the same matter.”

* Principles of Penal Law, 106, 193.

That any one Catholic priest, or any one Catholic layman, confessed that he was sent over to instigate the loyal to the execution of the bull, I do not believe. "That these seminarists were executed for treason, and not for religion appears," You say, (p. 221), "from the admirable tract of Lord Burleigh, printed in Bishop Gibson's collection." Surely You should have noticed that Dr. Allen published a reply, (in my opinion a triumphant reply) to this tract. The fallacy of Lord Burleigh's work consists in this:—when he says that the priests were executed for treason, his readers are naturally led by this expression to suppose, that the priests were executed for acts which were treasonable by the ancient law of the realm, or the acknowledged law of every country. Now, nothing can be farther from the fact; the treasons for which they were executed were acts, which under the ancient laws of the realm, were meritorious, or at least indifferent,—but rendered treasonable by Elizabeth's barbarous enactments.

14.—"For an account," You say in page 221, "of the refusal of the priests to profess their allegiance to the queen, which was in fact, declaring their allegiance to the Pope and his party, I refer to Your own narrative in the first volume of Your History of the Catholics of England, and to the third volume of Tracts against Popery." This part of my History was written after great research, and with particular care. I see nothing in it, which in respect either to fact or reasoning, exposes me to censure, or requires the slightest alteration or explanation.

I say in it,*—“ That the replies made by the “ priests to the six questions were unsatisfactory, “ is too clear ;” that “ they are either refusals to “ answer or evasive answers, or such answers as “ expressed their belief of the deposing doctrine, or “ at least a hesitation of opinion respecting it.”

I add, “ that among the six questions, there is “ not one which the Catholics of the present times “ have not fully and unexceptionably answered in “ the oaths which they have taken in compliance “ with the acts of the 18th, 31st and 33d year of “ his present majesty ;”—and that, “ in the reign “ of Elizabeth, several priests and the bulk of the “ laity would have answered them with the same “ candour and integrity of principle, as all the pre“ sent Catholic clergymen and laity of England “ would now answer them, and have in fact an“ swered them.”

In every part of my works, in which I have mentioned the refusal of the priests to answer these questions, I have lamented and condemned it. But let them not be blamed more than they deserve. In the words of Father Hart, one of the refusing priests,—which answer I have transcribed in my Historical Memoirs ; † “ they acknowledged “ her majesty to be their lawful queen ; and that “ she ought to be obeyed, notwithstanding the bull

* Vol. I. p. 429.

† Vol. I. p. 429.

“ the bull, supposed to be published by Pius the Fifth ; but whether she ought to be obeyed and taken for lawful queen, notwithstanding any bull or sentence, the Pope could give, this, they said they could not answer.”

I have no hesitation in repeating my opinion of that their refusal to answer their questions, justified strong precautions. But I also confidently assert; that all Elizabeth's new creation of felonies, pre-munires and treasons was an enormous abuse of the power of legislation, and cannot be too strongly deplored or condemned. If her government had been just and humane, even precaution would have been unnecessary.

15.—Your account of Father Campian, (page 226), contains much misrepresentation, both of him and of my account of his trial.

You say, that, from “ my account of him, You might infer, that he came into the country as an innocent merchant and traveller, and was arrested and condemned solely because he was a priest, and believed in transubstantiation and purgatory.”—Have I insinuated anything of the kind?—Have I not said, and, in your next preceding page, have You not cited me for saying, that “ he had entered into the society of Jesus,—had been ordained priest, and had returned to England to exercise his missionary functions ?” Then You exclaim,—“ How great will be the astonishment of the reader, who has depended on your apparent fairness and impartiality in “ your Book of the Roman Catholic Church, “ when he hears that Father Campian came to “ England,”—at the time and for the purposes You proceed to specify.—What grounds have You for this exclamation?—I certainly mention, in the Book of the Roman Catholic Church, the time of Campian’s arrival. I mention in it, that his purpose was, as I have just observed, to exercise his missionary functions.—The Bull of Mitigation I have cited and condemned in my Historical Memoirs, and it is mentioned in the authors I have referred to in the bottom of this page of the Book of the Roman Catholic Church? Was it necessary that I should re-write in that book every part of my Historical Memoirs? Are not these continually referred to? Do I not know by Your frequent references to them, that they were always under your eye?

Campian did not come to execute the Bull of Deposition.—He declared, both upon his trial, and under the fatal beam, that he considered Elizabeth, both in fact and right his queen. But all this is beside the question; I only profess to give an account of his trial; and upon his trial nothing said or insinuated in your exclamation, was proved, except his having been ordained a priest and having come into England.

16.—Here I beg leave to protest against your presenting, as You do in this place, and in a multitude of others, Your own views of the missionary functions or objects of the priests, as their real functions and real objects. These were,—and only were,—to instruct and confirm the people in the antient religion of the country, and in their religious and moral duties. The spiritual supremacy of the Pope was certainly a prominent tenet of the antient religion. You infer it to be a necessary consequence of their teaching the supremacy, that they instigated the people to accept the Pope's bull, and to concur in the deposition of the queen, which it prescribed. This is Your conclusion? and if You only presented it as such, I should have nothing to complain of, for You have the same right to draw conclusions as I have. But,—when You present Your conclusions as facts, You confound one with the other, and present to your readers the former as the latter.

From the first existence of these sanguinary laws to the present time, the Roman Catholics have uniformly denied,—and their priests as strougly as others,—that it was a part of their instructions to recommend, or that they ever did recommend a compliance with that bull. “Counterfeit letters * were privately left in their houses; spies sent up and down the country, to notice their discourses, and lay hold of their words; informers and reporters of idle stories against them, countenanced and credited: and even innocence itself,” to use Camden's own words, “though accompanied by prudence, was no guard to them.” Emissaries were employed, witnesses tutored, solicitation and terror used, and even the torture applied to procure evidence of the facts of which the priests were accused: but I defy You to produce a single instance, among the two hundred priests who suffered, in which their having recommended a compliance with the deposing injunctions of the bull, or even their having mentioned them, was proved against them. Is it then just, is it honourable, to present as clear indisputable facts, Your own conclusions? conclusions ever denied and protested against by the Catholics? If we are to be infamed, let it be by the production of facts, not by suppositions of them. —But no such facts can be produced against us; nothing is more completely true, than, what Dr. Milner asserts, in the sixth of his unanswered and unanswerable letters to Doctor Sturges, respecting the undeviating loyalty both of the Catholic clergy and Catholic laity, through the whole of the reign of Elizabeth: I shall transcribe a passage from the work at the end of this section of my present letter.

17.—I must now consider Your vindication of Hume, (p. 231). “He avers, that sedition, rebellion, and sometimes assassination, were the means “by which the seminarists intended to effect their “purpose against the queen.” In my fifteenth Letter to Doctor Southey, and in my Historical Memoirs, I have denied the charge generally, and justified my denial by seven unquestionable facts. These You successively mention and answer. I shall state in Your own words, my assertions and your answers, and then severally reply to the latter.

1.—I have said in the work I have mentioned, that of two hundred sufferers, one only impugned the queen's title.

You answer, by addressing me in these words ;—
 “ Do You mean that they denied the authority of “ the Pope's bull? The mere fact of their re“ ceiving and acknowledging the bull was to deny
 “ the title.”

I reply,—that they explicitly acknowledged Elizabeth to be their queen in fact and in right ; and that receiving or acknowledging the Pope's bull, either by word or deed, was not proved upon any of them,

2.—I have said, that “ all persisted, to the last,
 “ to deny their guilt, except the mere exercise of “ their functions.”

You ask,—“ Was not teaching obedience to a “ foreign enemy, that is, to the Pope,—a part of “ their functions?”

I reply,—That the priests taught obedience to the Pope, in concerns merely spiritual, and this only in the manner and to the extent which the antient law of the realm both allowed and ordered ; and that they inculcated no obedience whatever to Pope Pius's bull, or any obedience whatever to the Pope, which conflicted with the duty of allegiance.

3.—I have said,—That “ their accusers were “ uniformly persons of bad lives, and of the lowest “ character.”

You answer that, “ they were necessarily disco“ vered by spies, or betrayed by servants or accom“ plices, who are generally of this description.”

I reply,—that You therefore admit the fact I have alleged. The circumstances attending one of these discoveries, are so extraordinary, that I shall mention them in a note.*

* “ What credit is due to the confessions of Catholics, extorted at this time in the Tower, may be gathered from a letter of the celebrated apostate priest, John Nicholls, to Cardinal Allen, dated February 19th, 1583, who, having written a book against the Catholics, and otherwise wrongfully charged them with different crimes, excuses himself as follows:—“ Mr. Allen, whatever I have written against the pope, cardinals and bishops, I have written through ambition. God is my witness, that I never should have written at all, if the governor of the Tower had not forced me to do so. I have written and done many things which I have refused to write and to do, until the governor threatened me with the severest torture of the rack, the idea of which made my frail flesh tremble. I could hear nothing else in the prison, but such language as this: Do so and so, or else the keepers shall take you to the torture; (I had rather they had said the gallows.) Alas! Sir, it is no trifling thing for the body to be stretched upon the rack, until it is nearly two feet longer than nature made it. The fear and horror of their tortures, which they described to me, quite overcame me. I therefore wrote down whatever names the governor, or his servant, ordered me; amongst others, I put down those of Sir George Peccam and Judge Southcot, as being papists, and many others, quite unknown to me. Sir Owen Hopton, the governor, obliged me with his threats to make my confession just as he pleased; and when I had written the names of any papists (many of which I had never heard before), he required me to accuse them of being partizans of the pope and the queen of Scots, and professed enemies of the queen and council. Do thus, he would say, and the queen will promote you, and I will be your friend; but if you refuse, you shall be severely punished. From these particulars, you may judge of the rest.” See the whole letter

But I must express my astonishment, not to find in Your work, a single passage, in which You commiserate the sufferings of the Catholics, or blame the administration of the torture, or remark upon the little reliance which should be placed on confessions obtained by such iniquitous means. You even praise Burleigh's "Execution of Justice," where the use of the torture is justified. Words cannot express stronger reprobation of the Inquisition, its tortures and its other practices, than I have done repeatedly.

4th. I have said,—that the torture never produced a "confession of guilt."

You answer that "the priests confessed that they violated the law of England by obeying the Pope; this, under the existing circumstances, was unavoidable treason."

in the original Latin, Dodd, vol. ii. p. 308; also in the Book de Schism, Ang. p. 328. This John Nicholls, upon his apostacy, was much cried up for his learning, and having obtained some promotion, was appointed to preach a controversial sermon in the chapel of the Tower every Sunday, to which the Catholic prisoners were dragged by main force for near half a year together. Being touched with remorse of conscience, he wrote the above letter, and afterwards fled into Germany, but never reconciled himself to the Catholic church. Another of these converts to the rack, about the same time, Anthony Tyrrel, a priest from Rome, having falsely accused Cardinal Allen, Pope Gregory XIII. and other Catholics, of many crimes, and being ordered to publish these accusations in a recantation sermon in St. Paul's cathedral, instead of doing so, exclaimed from the pulpit, that he was a false wretch, and a betrayed of innocent persons. De Schisma ut supra. See his two interesting letters to Elizabeth, in Strype's Annals, vol. iii.—The whole of this note is copied from Doctor Milner's sixth Letter to a Prebendary.

I reply, that they never confessed the commission of any act that was treasonable by the ancient law of the realm; or any obedience to the Pope, which the ancient law of the realm did not allow.

5th. I have said, that “their trials were barbarously irregular.”

You answer that “they were unjustifiable in many instances, but not uniformly so.”

I reply, that they were uniformly unjustifiable.

6th. I have said,—that “even these produced no evidence of their treason, except their exercise of missionary functions.”

You answer, that “the question is as before said, whether these functions, under the circumstances did not imply treason.”

In reply,—I admit, that the exercise of these functions, harmless as they were in themselves, and most respectable as all Elizabeth’s ancestors had considered them,—were made treason by the barbarous code of Elizabeth.

7th. I have said,—“that the exercise by the priests of their missionary functions was seldom proved by competent evidence.”

You answer,—that “they generally confessed themselves missionaries.”

I reply,—that they seldom made the confession except upon the rack, or under too well grounded apprehensions of it.

8th. You now address me in these words,—“With a great appearance of fairness, You request our candid opinion, if there is now any ground for

“ the charge of disloyalty against the Seminarists.

“ —With the same candour I will answer you.”—

Your answer is given by a string of questions ; each of these I shall copy, and explicitly answer.

1st. “ What do you mean by disloyalty ? ”

The commission of any act, contrary to loyalty.

2d. “ Could the Romanist priest, if he was a conscientious man, be truly loyal to the queen, against whom his spiritual father had armed all Europe ? ”

I must observe,—that to say, “ that the Pope had armed all Europe against Elizabeth,” when he had armed, at the utmost, one European power against her, is a monstrous exaggeration.

But this is nothing :

I answer,—1st. That all Roman Catholics could, consistently with conscience and religious feeling, be loyal to the queen, even although the Pope had, in the very strongest terms, and under penalty of excommunication, enjoined them to be disloyal to her, the conduct of the Roman Catholics through the whole period of the Armada, abundantly proves :—2dly, That, with a small exception, all her Roman Catholic subjects were truly loyal to her :—3dly. That neither the law of God, nor the law of man, authorized the Pope to arm a single human being against her.

4. “ If the Romanists had been invested at this period with the power and authority of the state, would they not,” You ask, “ have obeyed the mandates of the Roman Pontiff ? ”

I am not certain that I understand your question. If You mean to ask, (which I believe You do), whether, if the Catholic party had, to use a modern expression, forced themselves into the administration, and attempted to re-establish the Roman Catholic religion, and Elizabeth had refused to co-operate with them, they would have obeyed the mandates of the Roman Pontiff, and deposed her from the throne?—

I answer,—they would not.

And, when I consider the peaceful and loyal conduct of the Catholics, when Elizabeth succeeded to the throne,—their unbroken patience, when with agonised minds, but without raising a single arm against her, they saw her break her coronation oath, and establish the Protestant religion on the ruins of the religion of their ancestors,—the loyal conduct of the Catholic body throughout her reign,—and their conduct towards the ungrateful Charles; I have no hesitation in giving this answer to your question.

The Catholic is a loyal religion.—How often has it been made a subject of reproach to Roman Catholics, that their religious principles are too loyal?

5. You then proceed, (page 235), to tell me that “ my reference to Ireland. deserves the “ severest reprobation.”

That the reader may see whether, what I have said respecting Ireland, contains any thing which deserves reprobation, I shall transcribe the passage, and leave it to his own conclusion.

“ Sir,”—I thus address myself to Dr. Southey, in that part of my fifteenth letter to him, in which I attempt to show, that Catholics have not been more guilty of persecution than Protestants,—“ if you are not yet convinced that you share the guilt of religious persecution, at least, equally with us, turn your eyes westward, and contemplate IRELAND!!!”

“ There, you will see a people to whom nature has been profusely kind. She has blest them with the most genial climate, the most fertile soil, the boldest coasts, the most navigable rivers; with strength, industry, energy, virtue, talent!— With all these advantages, they have for three hundred years, been the most miserable nation of the habitable globe, and present, at this moment, a scene of appalling wretchedness; a wretchedness so bitter, so deep, and so extensive, that even the enemies of their name shudder at beholding it; but, at the same time, a wretchedness formed by the original artificers of it, with such fiendish skill and contrivance, that it seems almost beyond human ability to remove it. To what is this owing? Let Lord Chancellor Clare answer in his own words: ‘The division of Ireland,’ says his Lordship, ‘between those who adhered to the Catholic, and those who adhered to the Protestant religion, is the grand schism which has been the bane and pestilence of Ireland, and rendered her a BLANK among the nations of Europe!’”

Why this passage deserve reprobation, I am at a loss to guess :

Must it not be, either because I have exaggerated the misery of that unhappy country, or because I have misquoted Lord Clare. Now my reference contains no exaggeration, and it transcribes his lordship's very words.

You say, that " every effort, which a wise and good government can make for Ireland is now in progress." Be it so : but those efforts are only of yesterday.

16. Alluding to Lord Clare's expression, that " the division of Ireland into those who adhered to the Catholic religion, and those who adhered to the Protestant religion, is the grand schism, which has been the bane and pestilence of Ireland, and rendered her a blank among the nations of Europe. You say, " if the great schism can be cured only by the ascendancy of the Romish Church, and by granting political power to its adherents, the grand schism must be continued."

If You mean to announce to us by these expressions,—that, if it should appear that the miseries of Ireland cannot be removed, except by the removal of the Protestant ascendancy, still the Protestant ascendancy should be continued, and Ireland must endure her misery,—You have said the most disgraceful thing of the Protestant religion, that ever has been, or that can be uttered. From which,—does a religion, which requires the misery of six-sevenths of a populous nation to the existence of her religion, and the preservation of the ascendancy which supports it, originate? the good or the evil principle?—It is for You to answer; but let it not be forgotten, that the case and the solution of it are Your own.

XV. 6.

Your denial of the merit of loyalty to the conduct of the English Catholics, while the coast was threatened by the Spanish Armada.

1. On the Spanish Armada, (page 236), You thus address me: “The Romanists of England
“ you remind us, armed in defence of the country “ against Philip, though his Armada was blessed
“ by the Pope.”

You then mention that, “when the throne of “ George III. was endangered by the progress of “ jacobinical opinions, the gentlemen of England,
“ who usually opposed the measures of the mi“ nister of the day, showed as much zeal for the “ defence of the country, as those who approved “ from the beginning the principles upon which “ the war was declared.”

You then ask,—

“Would You therefore,”—still continuing Your address to me,—“infer, that the government and “ the nation were not endangered by the preva“ lance of jacobinical principles, when thousands “ of the people would have hailed the sanguinary “ jacobins as their deliverers. So it was with the “ war with Spain, in the reign of Elizabeth. The “ Romanist noblemen and gentlemen would not “ see their country ravaged by the Spaniards ; and

 “ the address which they published at that time,
 “ is one of the most beautiful and affecting com“ positions of the age,—Yet there was still danger
 “ in the country, when thousands would have wel“ comed the Spaniards with their thumbscrews and “ instruments of torture.”

— Magna est veritas et prevalebit !!!

Here, You yourself admit explicitly, that the bull of Pius V. was disregarded by the Catholic nobility and the Catholic gentry!!!

But, to answer Your question,—It is most clear, that whatever might have been the danger of the country from jacobinical principles, at the time You mention, it was not to be inferred that the danger had wholly subsided, because the nobility and gentry had shown a good spirit. But, if the whole body of the people of England had shown a good spirit, and the jacobinical principles had been confined to England's continental enemies, a sanguinary and grinding legislation, which affected any one portion of the English nation would have been a monstrous cruelty, a savage injustice,

Then, to apply the ease You have supposed, to the measure of Elizabeth, if a good spirit had been shown by the nobility and gentry only, and a generally bad spirit had been shown by the remainder of the people, strong laws to coerce that bad spirit would have been proper. But, in the conduct of the Catholics at the time of which we are speaking, there was no such diversity of conduct ; clergy and laity, the high and the highest, the low and the lowest, displayed the same good spirit. Loyalty pure, animated and exulting loyalty, was the spirit of ALL. Thus every historian describes it.—How was this loyalty, this pure, animated, and exulting loyalty of the Catholics rewarded? By imprisonment, confiscation, torture, hanging and ripping up alive. Between the defeat of the Armada, and the death of Elizabeth, 100 priests were hanged and embowelled.

The cruel inattention of Elizabeth to the loyal spirit which her Catholic subjects thus universally displayed, and the barbarity of her subsequent legislation in their regard, are shocking. I am not apprised of any writer but yourself, who has approved them.

2. You say to me, (page 234),—“ You make a solemn appeal to Mr. Southey, in which You compare the persecutions by Protestants to those by the Romanists, and again leave us to infer, that both being once equally guilty, our mutual reproaches on this head ought to cease.” I answer “ as solemnly as you address us :”

“ We,—You say,—“ have no infallibility to defend.”

We,—I say,—have no infallibility, spiritual or temporal to defend, which teaches, or which is authorised to teach, either the duty or the lawfulness of persecution.

If by an impossible supposition,—the Pope and a general council should propound to us the doctrine of religious intolerance, as an article of faith, or the execution of it as a religious or moral duty,—we should laugh at their monstrous folly, and say, as our ancestors did to Pope Boniface, when he required Edward the First to abstain from his claim upon the Scottish crown, “We do not, we will not, we cannot, and we ought not to do it.”*

“We,”—You say,—“have no principle of persecution to resign.”

We,—I say,—neither have nor ever had any principle of persecution to resign. We detest and disclaim every such principle absolutely, and without any qualification.

You, then say,—“Unless the decree of the Council of Lateran, and the article of the Council of Trent, which sanctions all former councils, be repealed, the Protestant nation which confers power on the Romanists, will be guilty of a direktion of its first duty.”

Then,—I say,—the Protestant nation of England may, in this very moment confer power upon the Romanists without any direktion of duty: the canon to which You refer,—if that canon ever existed,—is, I have demonstrated,—gone, to the grave of all the Capulets.

3. In Your last page but one, You accuse me of sophistry and disingenuousness.—Knowing the fallibility of poor human reason, I dare not absolutely affirm,—that, I have never been guilty of sophistry: I believe that I have not:—If I have, all who know me, know, that it has been unintentionally. Of disingenuousness I aver myself perfectly innocent. If I felt myself guilty of it, my grey hairs would soon descend with sorrow to the grave.

* Historical Memoirs of the English, Irish and Scottish Catholics, Ch. VII. Vol. I. p. 46.

XV. 7.

Conclusion.

I have now reached the close of your fifteenth letter.

In our view of the legislation of queen Elizabeth, in respect to her Roman Catholic subjects, we are completely at issue: You describe the general allegiance of the body of the Roman Catholics to have been unsound;—You think, that their allegiance being thus universally unsound, the laws which treated them all as great delinquents, and which required no other evidence of their delinquency, than proof of their refusal of the oath of supremacy, were founded in morality and justice:—You think that, generally speaking, they had fair trials:—You do not condemn the inflictions of the torture upon them;—and You approve all the other severities with which they were treated, or, at least the general system of them, as justified by necessity. I think that the allegiance of the body was sound, with a very small exception; that the number of those who composed this exception was inconsiderable, and of no real importance; still that it would have justified the queen in adopting strong precautionary measures; but that, she was most unjustifiable in treating the whole body of Roman Catholics as delinquents in allegiance, and in making the mere proof of a refusal of the oath of supremacy, evidence of treason; I also think that the trials of them were wholly irregular; the use of torture execrable; and the other severities, used in their regard, abominably cruel. In my Historical Memoirs,* I have shown the condition of the Roman Catholics under Elizabeth, and at the close of the reign of James I: I shall insert it at the end of my next letter: it will fully show what You approve, and I condemn.

In this place I shall shortly state the number of the Catholics who were hanged and embowelled, and the condition of those who were permitted to live.

The total number of those who were hanged and embowelled amounted to 204. In this list no priest is included, who was executed for any plot, real or imaginary, except eleven, who were executed for the pretended plot at Rheims or Rome; a plot which was so daring a forgery, that even Camden, the eulogizing biographer of Elizabeth, allows the sufferers to have been political victims.

Of the 204,

15	were executed for denying the queen's supremacy;
126	- - - for the exercise of priestly functions;
63	- - - for being reconciled to the Catholic faith, or assisting priests.

* Vol. II. Ch. LII.

All this, you think, was very right; You tell us, (p. 207), "that your ancestors were men of wisdom, and had sufficient reason to pass their various enactments,"—under which these unhappy sufferers were hanged and embowelled.

Leaving these to what you seem to consider their just fate, let us consider the condition of the Roman Catholics whom the laws permitted to survive.

"I say nothing," says Doctor Milner, "of many, who were whipped, fined or stripped of their property, to the utter ruin of their families. In one night, fifty Catholic gentlemen in the county of Lancaster, was suddenly seized and committed to prison, on account of their non-attendance at church. About the same time, I find an equal number of Yorkshire gentlemen lying prisoners in York castle, on the same account, most of whom perished there. These were, every week, for a twelvemonth together, dragged by main force, to hear the established service performed in the same chapel."

Doctor Bridgwater, in a table published at the end of his "Concertatio Cartholica," gives the names of about 1,200, who had been deprived of their livings or estates, or who had been imprisoned or banished, or who were otherwise victims of prosecution for their religion, previously to the year 1588, the period when the persecution of the Catholics rose to its height; declaring, at the same time, that he was far from having named all, and that he mentioned the names of those only who had come to his personal knowledge; many of them died in prison, and some under sentence of death.

But, what language can describe the individual misery and mental agony of the general body of the Roman Catholics during this long period of woe? “ Out of every pulpit, press, or stationer’s shop,” say Mr. Charles Eyston,* a spectator of it, “ such invectives, slanders, infamies, untruths, and lies, were cast upon priests as seditious, and upon Catholics as impious and wicked, as were without measure or remedy.—Their houses were daily searched and rifled; their altars, chalices, books, church stuff, beads, &c. were taken from them and turned to common uses; the name of Catholic was denied them; the common law making for them was inverted and turned against them: and, for the queen of Scots and their sakes, the name of Rome was maliced; the Pope vilified and liared; the Catholic emperors, kings and princes were traduced: and the Catholics themselves became the trampling-stones of all pursuivants, informers, promoters, and other hungry, needy and merciless people, for the covetousness of their goods, for the confiscation of their lands, and for the begging of their estates, in such sort as was both outrageous and insatiable. To conclude: the Catholics,—some of them from 5,000*l.* yearly, some from 2,000*l.*, and others

* Hist. Mem. Vol. II. c. XL.

“ from 1,000*l.* 500*l.* 100*l.* 50*l.* more or less yearly “ revenues, fell to extreme misery, could no ways “ please the statists but in being miserable. Where“ upon they endured such ravengings, pillagings, and “ pollings, such exiles, imprisonments, and tortures,
 “ such enslaving of their persons, and such effu-
 “ sion of their innocent blood, as came not short “ of the Arian persecution itself: even such, as “ neither eye has seen, or ear heard of in any “ Christian commonwealth.”

All this too, so far as it was sanctioned by the laws, or was the necessary and unavoidable consequence of them, was, You think, very right.—Our ancestors, You say, who passed these laws were men of wisdom, and had sufficient reason to pass them.

I differ from You.—I confidently assert, that no principle of justice or morality authorises one-third part, or to speak more properly, one-sixth part of a nation,—for the followers of Elizabeth’s episcopalian religion, did not exceed that proportion of it,—to establish either their government or their creed by such sanguinary, degrading, impoverishing and exterminating laws, as hers.

Your accusations of us have made these statements and reflections necessary; most unwillingly have I brought them forward, or argued upon them;—but what necessity requires, necessity excuses. Permit me to conclude my letter with the words which I have addressed to Dr. Southey, in my twelfth letter to that gentleman.

“ The Reformation, and all that is connected with “ it, is now established by law ; and, never have a “ vanquished people more completely submitted to “ the conquerors, have conducted themselves with “ greater propriety, or received alleviation of their “ condition with greater gratitude than the Ro“ man Catholics have done. NONE of his Ma-“ jesty’s subjects are more attached to his govern“ ment. When we think of our past grievances,
“ we bless the hands which have relieved so many “ of them : an angry feeling seldom rises, except “ when we feel our religion traduced, and our “ ancestors vilified in such a manner, that we “ should deservedly be thought more or less than “ men, if we did not exert ourselves to repel the “ unmerited aggression.”

LETTER XVI.

THE GUNPOWDER CONSPIRACY.

Mr. Townsend's Assertion of the Extensiveness of the Gunpowder Plot.

YOU begin Your criminations of us in this Your letter upon the reign of James I, (p. 240), by controverting my assertion in "the Historical Memoirs," of "the fair words and promises" given by James to the Roman Catholics. The evidence which I have produced of them, appears to me abundantly sufficient to satisfy any impartial person of the truth of my assertion; and, in addition to it we now have, what You have seen in the State Paper Office, the explicit testimony of the Earl of Northumberland. As to James's own denial, his acknowledged prevarications renders it of no account.

On the characters of the conspirators You tell me, (p. 257), that "I quote with approbation a contemporary writer, who declares, that the conspirators were 'a few wicked and desperate wretches;'" You then show that some of them were respectably born and filled respectable situations. But this does not prove that they were not wicked or desperate; and I was so far from concealing their respectable births or situations, that

I have cited * the expression of Father More, that “ they were of noble family and high rank.” You dilate on the extensiveness of the conspiracy: Hume informs us, † that “ with all their attendants, they “ never exceeded the number of eighty persons.” Doctor Southey calls them “ a few bigots.” ‡ James himself § speaks of the conspiracy as a “ tragi-comedy; a tragedy to the traitors, but a comedy “ to the king and all his new subjects.” You, I believe, are the first person who has asserted that a large portion of the Catholic body was engaged in it.

XVI. 2.

Mr. Townsend's Assertion, that the Catholics have uniformly refused, even in our own age, the security of loyalty to their Temporal Sovereign.

I must express my surprise, on reading in Your present letter, (page 244), that “ the Catholics “ refused, as they have uniformly done, even in “ our own age, the security of loyalty to our Temporal Sovereign.”

Without reverting to their conduct in former times, which I have already sufficiently noticed, I beg leave to refer You to the oaths of allegiance universally taken by the English, Irish, and Scotch

Catholics, in 1778, and even since that time ; and I call upon You to state explicitly,^f “ what security “ for loyalty,” to use Your own words, “ has been “ refused by them in the present age, to their tem“ poral sovereign.”—I KNOW OF NONE.

XVI. 3.

Cecil's Privity to the Conspiracy.

YOU begin this part of Your present letter, (page 247), by addressing me in the following lines :—

“ In your History of the Catholics of England, “ &c. You quote, with seeming approbation, various “ obscure writers, who have attempted to prove “ that the Gunpowder Plot was the invention of “ Lord Salisbury. You candidly acknowledge, “ indeed, that no single fact has been discovered,
“ which could lead you to this conclusion ; but you “ seem unwilling that the reluctant conviction
“ of Your own mind should influence Your “ reader.”

If the imputation conveyed by these lines be just, I deserve the charge of the most shameful disingenuousness.

I must be desirous of repelling it : to do this, I shall transcribe the section to which You refer, and without note or comment leave it to the judgment of my readers.*

“ No circumstance, which has come to the “ knowledge of the writer in the course of his

* Hist. Memoirs, Vol. II. Ch. XLVI. p. 172.

“ investigation of this interesting part of his sub“ ject, has led him to the discovery of a single “ fact, which can render Cecil justly suspected “ of having been privy to the plot, previously to a “ short time preceding its discovery. That in his “ disposition he was extremely unfavourable to the “ Catholics, and that he would rejoice in any “ any event that was likely to render them objects
“ of public odium, may be conceded ; but, while
“ this affords ground for suspicion, it extends no “ higher ; and thus, so far as it stands single, “ proves nothing.

“ It is said, that some Protestant writers, as “ Osborne, Higgins, and the author of ‘ The Pro-“ testant’s Plea,’ and ‘ The Politician’s Cate“ chism,’ accuse Cecil of fomenting the plot, and “ reaping its fruits : but not one of these writers “ mention a single fact which supports the accu“ sation. Now where there is not evidence, there “ cannot be proof.

“ It is observable, that the expression of Os- “ borne is misquoted. He is cited for having called “ called the plot ‘ a neat device of the secretary ;’
“ now he applies this expression, not to the plot
“ but to the letter, which was sent to Lord Mont-“ eagle ; which letter he terms ‘ a neat device of “ the secretary, to fetch him, into whose nature
“ and person, if not to both, he had a quarrel,’ ”
“ —a loose intimation, and entitled to no regard.
“ Higgins wrote at the distance of more than a “ century after the event took place ; what he says

“ is altogether assertion, and is therefore of no “ weight. The writers of ‘The Protestant’s Plea,’
 “ and ‘The Politician’s Catechism,’ wrote nearer “ to the time ; but as they support their insinua“ tions neither by fact or argument, the testimony “ *of neither is entitled to a voice. It has also been “ said, that King James used to call the 5th of “ November, the day on which the plot was dis“ covered, ‘Cecil’s Holyday ;’ now, as Cecil’s “ favour, both with his master and the public, was “ considerably increased by the discovery of the “ plot, it may be supposed that the expression of “ James referred to this circumstance, and this is “ a more probable construction of his words, than “ to suppose them used to denote that Cecil was the “ contriver of the plot. His contrivance of it is “ intimated by Lord Castlemain, in the excellent “ apology which we shall transcribe in a future
 “ part of this work. This is the more important,
 “ as his Lordship lived near the time of the plot,
 “ possessed more than ordinary talents and dis“ cernment, and was extremely well informed on “ all subjects connected with this period of the “ Catholic history. It must be added, that the “ circumstance appears to have been generally

* “ The last of these writers mention, that one of Cecil’s “ servants, two months before the event happened, advised
 “ a Catholic friend of his, of the name of Buck, to be upon “ his guard, as some great mischief was on the forge against “ those of his religion : but this circumstance unaccompanied
 “ by others is of no weight.”

“ believed by the Catholics of those times, and “ their immediate descendants.

“ It has been generally thought, that the letter “ sent to Lord Monteagle, which led to the public “ discovery of the plot, was written by Mr. Francis “ Tresham, one of the conspirators, the author of “ ‘The Politician’s Catechism,’ (p. 94), says, that “ ‘one master Tresham, and another Catholic, who “ were thought to have been Cecil’s instruments in “ all this business, having access to him even at “ midnight, were sent to the Tower, and never “ seen afterwards, lest they should tell tales;—
“ and it’s very certain that Percy and Catesby “ might have been taken alive, when they were “ killed: but that Cecil knew full well, that these “ two unfortunate gentlemen would have related
“ the story less to his own advantage, than himself “ caused it to be published; therefore they were “ dispatched when they might have been made “ prisoners, having no other weapons, defensive
“ or offensive, than their swords.’ If these inti“ mations had been accompanied by any circum“ stances which tended to corroborate them, they “ might be entitled to attention; but in the total “ absence of every thing of this kind, they deserve “ little regard. Because Tresham had access at “ all hours to Cecil, it does not follow that Tres“ ham was Cecil’s instrument in a conspiracy;—
“ because Tresham died suddenly in prison, it does “ not follow that he was poisoned by Cecil’s “ order;—because Catesby and Percy, and their “ followers, rushed on the troops sent to take “ them, with their swords in their hands, and a “ determination to sell their lives as dearly as pos“ sible, it does not follow that they fell in the “ conflict, it was because express directions had “ been given, that they should not be taken alive,*

 “ It may be added, that the concurrent testimony
 “ of all the conspirators declared that Catesby was
 “ the author of the conspiracy, and that Percy
 “ was his first associate; that from all we know
 “ of the characters of the conspirators, Catesby
 “ and Percy were the most unlikely to have any “ communications with Cecil; and that when the “ first news of the conspiracy was divulged, they “ fled into the country, which, if they had any “ claims upon Cecil for previous communications,
 “ it is most unlikely they would have done.”

“ Besides,—from some documents published
 “ by the late Dr. Nash, in his History of Worces“ tershire,† it appears probable that the commu- “ nication to Lord Monteagle was made, not by “ Tresham, as some, or by Percy, as others have “ suspected, but by Mary, the wife of Mr. Thomas “ Abingdon, of Henlip, in Worcestershire. She “ was a sister of Lord Monteagle; and Mr. Abing- “ don, her husband, who had taken an active part
 “ in the conspiracy, and in whose house at Henlip

* It now appears by the examination in the State Paper Office, that the sheriff sent them a regular summons to surrender; and that they answered it by a haughty defiance.

† They are inserted in the Appendix, Note 11.

“ Garnett and Oldcorn were concealed, was pardoned at her intercession.

“ It has also been observed, in confirmation of suspicions suggested respecting Cecil’s early privity to the conspiracy, that he appears, from his own admission, to have known of it before the letter was sent to Lord Monteaale. This is certainly true; but surely wisdom and sound policy required, that, before he made the plot public, particularly as no mischief could arise from his keeping it a secret, he should discover all the actors in it, and every person who might be reasonably suspected, from the circumstances to which the event might lead, of evil design against the state. Had the late Cato-street conspiracy come sooner to the knowledge of his Majesty’s ministers, would they, or ought they, not to have kept it secret until they had discovered, as far as possible, all the conspirators, and all their accomplices and connections?

“ To this must be added, the total want of every kind of positive evidence to fix the charge upon Cecil: we do not find the slightest intimation, in the examination of any person engaged in the conspiracy, that he or any other person was drawn into it by the artifices of Cecil.”

XVI. 4.

Whether the Gunpowder Conspiracy can be justly charged on the general body of the Roman Catholics.

To prove the affirmative, you produce, (p. 249), four reasons :—I shall successively transcribe each of them in your own words, and answer it.

1.—“ That the gunpowder conspiracy was justified upon the principles taught by the Roman Catholic church.”

For this, you cite the authority of the third canon of the fourth Council of Lateran. I have demonstratively shown, in my ninth letter, that this canon, if it ever existed, was not a canon of a general council ; and that its authority, if it ever had any, had ceased long before the event in question.

You say :—“ This decree was not considered useless or obsolete at the period of which we are speaking, though it would not now be absolutely defended by any Romanist in these kingdoms, who has received it as an article of faith.”

I answer, 1st, This canon was never considered to be an article of faith in any part of Christendom. 2ndly, I admit that the doctrine upon which it proceeded had, at the period of which we are speaking, some advocates ; 3dly, I assert that it was taught by the first Protestant reformers, and carried into execution in many Protestant states ; and, 4thly, That no Roman Catholic in England, or in the whole world, has received, or, if it were proposed to him, would receive the canon, as an article of faith, or even as a matter of opinion; and that, if the acceptance of it were now proposed to any Catholic, in any part of the world, by the Pope, the whole college of cardinals, all their congregations, and all their canonists, the Catholic would spurn it with scorn.

2. "These principles," you continue (page 249), "were taught in the reign of James I, by the priests or jesuits, or instructors of the Romanists, to such an extent, at least, if not universally, as to justify the suspicions and jealousy of the existing government."

I acknowledge, nearly in your own words, that the deposing doctrine was taught in the reign of James I, by several Roman Catholic priests, jesuits and instructors, to such an extent as justified the suspicions and jealousy of the existing government, and made measures of precaution necessary.

But I repeat, that the general body of the Catholics preserved their integrity; and that, although it was both wise and just to adopt measures of precaution, the sanguinary and exterminating code of legislation passed by Elizabeth, and adopted and aggravated by James, was unwise, unjust, and cannot be too severely condemned.

I must observe, that nothing is so bad, which may not be represented worse than it really is. The deposing doctrine was most reprehensible; but the limitations, with which it was propounded, took away something from its atrocity. It was universally allowed to be applicable to extreme cases only : to those only, in which the oppression of the tyrant was enormous, and the subject was without legal or constitutional means of remedy, --and where, to use Doctor Johnson's expression, " Nature herself will arise, and assert her injured " rights." It was also required, that the Pope, or, if he were not accessible, that some grave personage should have been consulted upon it, and have pronounced it lawful. Still, even with these limitations, the doctrine was indefensible : it was held by few, and censured by the general mass of Catholic writers, in the severest and harshest terms. But, by how many Protestants has it been held? by how many practised?—Was it not held by Milton, Knox, Willcock, Goodman, and many others? * Goodman, in his book De Vera Obedientia, written at Geneva, says, " It is a duty " incumbent on all the people to see that idolaters" (i. e. Roman Catholics), " should be punished, " however great they may be, whether king, queen " or emperor. If the governors fall from God, " away with them to the gallows! (ad furcas " abripiant)." He adds, that " Wyatt did his duty, " and that all professors of the Gospel should " have risen with him; that Mary was a monster " and a beast, who ought to be put to death. The " aforesaid book is ushered in with a preface by " Whittingham, another Protestant fugitive, after-

* See the Decree of the University of Oxford, 21 July 1683, in Somers's Tracts, Vol. III. p. 223.

“wards dean of Durham, commending it, and “testifying that it was approved by the chief “divines of the place.”* Thus has the deposing doctrine been held and taught in the Protestant church.

As to the practice of it by Protestants, it is an undoubted fact, that “more sovereign princes “were deposed on the whole, or in part, of “their dominions, by their Protestant subjects,
 “during the first century after the Reformation,
 “than have been deposed by the Popes, for the “time of their first pretending to such power.”† Thus, Sir, Protestant doctors have maintained the doctrine, at least, as far in theory, and assuredly much further in practice, than the Catholics.
 Peaceful men disturb the ashes of neither.

3. You say, (p. 254), that, “the principles upon “which the gunpowder plot was planned were “sanctioned by the superiors of the Romanists,
 “and by the Popes, whom they venerated.” I admit that, to the extent I have mentioned, the deposing doctrine was sanctioned by several of the superiors of the Roman Catholics. But I affirm, that not a single Catholic teacher or writer did, at the time of which we are speaking, or before that time, maintain those doctrines to such an extent, or in such a manner, as would justify the gunpowder plot.

4. You say (p. 255), “That the conspiracy
 “must be imputed to the Romanists of that day,

* Dr. Milner's Sixth Letter to Doctor Sturges.

† Ibid.

“ as a body, because it was the inference from the “ principles generally taught by the Jesuits, and “ intended to be carried into effect, as a religious “ duty, by the members of the Romish church only.
 “ No political evil was a subject of complaint which “ might have united other classes of his Majesty’s “ subjects in the efforts to remove the grievances.
 “ It was a deliberate act, to which the principal “ leader, Catesby, was resolved by the Jesuits, “ that it was both lawful and meritorious; and “ herewith, says Lord Coke, he persuaded and “ settled the rest, as any seemed to make any “ doubts. They took an oath of secrecy, which “ was administered by the Jesuits Gerard and “ Greenway, and received the sacrament to make “ that oath more solemn.”

Here you bring two accusations against the Jesuits: they are both of them atrocious, and both groundless.

The first is, that “ the infernal plan was “ resolved by the Jesuits to be lawful and meri“ torious.” I defy You to produce the slightest evidence that warrants this charge. Lord Coke, upon the trial of Father Garnet, brought this charge against them, but did not produce any evidence of it: I appeal to the account of the trial published by Government.

So far as Sir Edward Coke supported his charges
 by evidence, I admit them without hesitation.
 Nothing that rests on his own assertion, has any weight. Like You, I wish the examinations in the State Paper office, on the gunpowder plot, were published. I have no apprehension that the cause of the Roman Catholics would suffer from the publication; but, even if I foresaw this would be the case, I should wish, as every friend to historic truth must do, that the evidence was published. I take this opportunity to observe, that all the examinations have not yet been discovered. It is clear, from Causaubon's letter to the Jesuit Fronto le Duc, and from Abbott's Antilogia, that some examinations, not yet discovered, were taken.

XVI. 5.

Father Garnet.

1. You refer to the conversation between Catesby and Garnet, respecting the murder of the innocent with the guilty:—Surely justice required of You to mention, that no evidence which supports Your representation of it has been produced; and that Garnet uniformly declared, that the question, as it was put to him, and as he understood it, had no reference to Catholic concerns, and turned only on the general lawfulness of attacks in war, by which the innocent as well as the guilty were equally exposed to death.

In page 259, You address me in these terms:—
 “ In your History of the English Catholics, You “ quote from Mr. Hume these words, “ the “ conspirators, with all their attendants, never ex“ ceeded the number of eighty persons;” “ yet You

“ have so entirely forgotten your own former “ quotation, as well as the latter perusal, which “ elicited your very complimentary gratitude to “ the Secretary of State, that you assert, sixteen “ Catholics at the most were privy to the gun-
 “ powder plot.”

I must express some surprize at Your professing to find any contradiction in these passages. Mr. Hume evidently speaks of all the conspirators and all their attendants, when they took the field in Warwickshire; I speak only of the sixteen included in the act of attainder. - I must also mention, that of these, nine, at the most, were privy to the design to blow up the building by gunpowder.

3. You tell me, (page 260), that, “ I conclude
 “ the plot to be improbable, because the Romanists, “ as well as the Protestant peers, would have been “ its victims.”

I have never said or intimated that the plot is “ improbable.”

That it really existed, cannot be denied: I believe no Roman Catholic has denied its existence, or that some Roman Catholics were actively engaged in it.

5. You quote, (page 277), an expression from the Historical Memoirs, in which I say, “ that “ Garnet might be found guilty in a court of law, “ while a court of honour would think gently of
 “ the case,” as if it referred by it to the whole of Garnet’s case, and particularly to his equivocations.

If this expression stood single, it would be very reprehensible; it might be thought an approbation of all Garnet's conduct, and particularly of his equivocations. But, in justice to me, You should have noticed, that my expression applied only to Garnet's concealment, not of the powder plot, but of the turbulent and seditious designs of some Catholics—highly blameable, it is very true, but wholly unconnected with the powder part of the conspiracy. I acknowledge, in the passage from which You have extracted the passage in question, that Garnet's concealment of these was misprision of treason; and this, I observe, Garnet himself appears to have admitted. I then proceed to suggest some reasons, which,—still confining the concealment in the manner I have mentioned,—appear to me to extenuate it, and to render Garnet an object of compassion. As the charge which You have brought against me is so serious, I shall transcribe the whole passage which contains it: You must see, when You peruse it, that it has no reference to his knowledge of the powder plot, or to his equivocations; and that it merely attempts to show, that, in the unhappy situation in which he was placed, with the indistinct knowledge which he had of the circumstances of the case, and with the hopes which he might reasonably entertain that the whole would come to nothing, it might not be dishonourable for him to pause before he made the communication. The passage is thus expressed:—

M

“ Garnet, however, had received other commu- “ nications. We have seen how great his apprehen“ sions were, that some among the Catholics, would,
“ in opposition both to their religion and their “ true interest, have recourse to violent measures,
“ and how anxiously and earnestly he strove
“ to prevent them. Here the question arises,— “ whether it was his duty to communicate to “ Government these apprehensions and their “ causes? Upon this, Garnet would naturally “ pause: it is repugnant to the feelings of every “ honourable man to turn informer. Perhaps “ Garnet did not know any thing specific, or any “ thing that he could demonstrate by regular proof;
“ but he knew the hostile spirit of the ministers to
“ the Catholics: this, he must fear, would lead “ them to proceedings of extravagant and undis“ tinguishing cruelty; and he believed also, or at “ least strongly hoped, that his paternal and salu“ tary councils had withdrawn these turbulent “ spirits from the precipice to which they were “ rushing. Add to this, that the communications
“ of which we are now speaking, had informed “ Garnet rather of the existence of a general “ angry mind among some of the Catholics, in “ consequence of the very unexpected treatment
“ which they received from James, immediately
“ after his accession to the throne, than of a “ settled or organized plan of aggression. Now,
“ this spirit of general and indistinct turbulence “ commonly evaporates in its own blusterings, and “ produces nothing serious. Viewing the situation

 “ of Garnet in this light, every candid person
 “ will make great allowances for the line of con“ duct which he pursued, and hesitate before he “ condemns him : he might be justly found guilty
 “ by a court of law, while a court of honour “ would think gently of his case. He appears to “ the writer, to have pronounced a just sentence
 “ on himself, when, after intimating his own doubt, “ whether his conduct had been quite blameless,
 “ in not revealing the communications of which “ we are now speaking, he asked pardon of his “ sovereign for concealing whatever it had been “ his duty to reveal.”

You now have the whole passage before You :
 How different is the import of the whole from that of the solitary sentence which You have transcribed?
 what sentiments does it contain, that a gentleman might not honourably express? I must add, that both editions of my “ Book of the Roman Catholic “ Church,” were published before the appearance of the last volume of Doctor Lingard’s history ; and that the Doctor mentions in it, from manuscripts in his possession, some circumstances unfavourable to Garnet, which, until his publication of them, were unknown :—a strong proof of Doctor Lingard’s historical candour and truth.

6. Speaking of Garnet’s equivocations, You tell me in page 277, “ that no expression of indig“ nation, no phrase of contempt for Garnet’s doc“ trine of equivocation, escapes me.”

Do I not in my Historical Memoirs,* call the doctrine of equivocation, “odious and pernicious?” Do I not say, that “it saps the foundations of “honourable intercourse in society, and fair dealing between man and man?” Do I not cite Mr. Alban Butler, and Bossuet’s condemnation of it.

After all,—what does Garnet’s guilt, in respect to all his equivocations amount to? It is, that being interrogated in the view of the rack and the gibbet, upon questions to which he could not give direct answers without criminating himself, and which could not therefore be justly or even honourably required, he had recourse to equivocation! Does he upon this account deserve the most opprobrious expressions in the English language? Is he not rather an object of compassion. If You compare his conduct with that of Cranmer, in the last six days of his life; with the letters of the supreme head of your church to secretary Davison, Sir Amyas Paulet, or King James, respecting the unfortunate Mary, or with the answers of the Bishops to Charles I. when he consulted them on Lord Strafford’s case,—will Garnet suffer by the comparison?—but I repeat once more, I do not acquit,—I do not justify Garnet; I only commiserate him.

“ of the conspiracy, I should still affirm that the “ result of my researches had been favourable to “ the Catholic cause, has excited in many the most “ painful impressions.”

Why my expression should excite pain in any person, I am utterly at a loss to conceive. Surely, when so respectable a portion of the nation, as his Majesty's Roman Catholic subjects, are criminated, it must give pleasure to every honourable mind, to see them wholly, or even partially vindicated.

You deny that the recent searches at the State Paper office have been favourable to them.—1. Is it not favourable to them, that these searches have produced the declaration of the Earl of Northumberland, that James had commissioned him to make promises to the Catholics, if they would not oppose his succession? *

2. Is it not favourable to them, that these searches have led to the discovery of nothing which justifies the oft told, oft refuted, and now revived tale, that the general body of the Catholics, were implicated in the conspiracy? or which shows, that a single Catholic, except those whose guilt is upon record, was concerned in it?

3. Is it not favourable to them, that the charge

* Interrogatories, of the 23d of November.—The very letter of James to the Earl, in which these promises were made, has been published by Miss Aikin, in her court of James I. p. 253. James's denial of these and others deserve no credit. “ There are too many instances,” as Dr. Lingard justly observes, (Hist. Vol. VI. p. 33, note 41), “ in which he has denied his own words.”

of the Jesuits having administered an oath of secrecy to the conspirators, and also administered to them the sacrament to add solemnity to their oaths, is now proved, by the testimony of Winter and Fawkes, to be absolutely false?

Winter says, that “the five,”—Catesby, Piercy, Winter, Fawkes, and one of the Wrights,—“administered the oath to each other in a chamber, in which no other body was, and then went to another room to receive the sacrament.”* Fawkes says, that “the five did meet at an house in the fields beyond St. Clements Inn, where they did confer and agree upon the plot, and there they took a solemn oath and vow, by all their force and power to execute the same, and of secrecy not to reveal any of their fellows, but to such as should be thought fit persons to enter into that action; and in the same hour, they did receive the sacrament in the house of Gerard the Jesuit, to perform their vow of secrecy aforesaid. But that Gerard was not acquainted of their purpose.”† The whole of this deposition was read at the trial, with the exclusion of the passage exculpating Gerard. In the original, a line is drawn before the exculpatory sentence, with the words huc usque in the hand-writing of Sir Edward Coke: “who,” as Doctor Lingard ‡ justly observes,

“ was unwilling to publish to the world a passage,
 “ which might serve to the justification of one,
 “ whom he meant to accuse.”

Is it not favourable to the Catholics, that this great unfairness in the legal proceedings against them has been discovered?

But what avails testimony in favour of Catholics?—Having seen both the testimony of Winter and the testimony of Guy Fawkes, You repeat the charge.

9. Did not justice require of You to mention, that as soon as the conspiracy became known, the Catholics universally expressed their horror at it? That Blackwell, the Catholic arch-priest, and the other heads of the English Catholic Church, immediately circulated a pastoral letter, in which they called it “ detestable and damnable,” and assured the Catholics, that “ the Pope had always condemned such unlawful practices?” That the Catholics presented an address to the king; another to both houses of parliament; a third to Cecil, the secretary; declaring in each their abhorrence of the plot, asserting their innocenee, and urging inquiry; that the arch-priest received a brief from the Pope reprobating the plot, and published it.* All this is mentioned in my Historical Memoirs, and in my sixteenth letter to Dr. Southey; yet You conceal it all. Dodd also mentions,—but this, perhaps, You did not know,—that “Pope Paul v. addressed a letter to James, in which he expressed the strongest condemnation of the gunpowder conspiracy.” Did not Father Persons,* who wrote at the time, apply to it the harshest terms of condemnation? Did not Dr. Challoner,† the oracle, in his time, of the English Catholics, call it a detestable conspiracy? Does not Dr. Milner ‡ tell Dr. Sturges, that it is impossible for the doctor to detest it more than he does? Whatever You knew of these facts, surely justice called on You to mention; Finally,—Did not every feeling of honour require You to mention, that a single instance cannot be produced, in which a Roman Catholic has attempted to defend it; or in which, if he has mentioned it, he has not spoken of it with execration? You yourself know that it is condemned, abominated and abhorred by Catholics as much as Protestants:—all this You know; but nothing of it You mention. No ignorant person will rise from the perusal of this part of Your work, without believing, that the principles which induced the gunpowder conspirators to engage in their diabolical designs, have been for centuries, and are at this time, the actual principles of the Catholic religion, and would lead the present Catholics, if not repressed by the hand of power, into similar enormities.

Is this to be endured? Is it to be borne, that the Roman Catholics, who possess some of the noblest blood in the country, who fill every condition of life with honour and integrity, to whose loyalty, the late and the present king, and the legislature, have paid the amplest tribute of praise, and whose affection it is so much the interest and the wish of Government to conciliate, should be thus maligned?

Examples of similar Attempts of Protestants against Catholic Princes.

Permit me to transcribe, from Doctor Milner's seventh letter, what he says upon the subject to which I now call your attention.

“ I have one more observation to make on this “ subject. You, no less than the writers whom “ whom you quote, exhaust your eloquence in re“ presenting the crime of those wretched dupes
 “ of Cecil's villainy,* as a wickedness unex-
 “ ampled, as well as unequalled in history.† It “ is impossible, Sir, for you to detest it more than “ I do; but when you speak of it, as a new and “ unheard of species of guilt, you pay a compli“ ment to the inventive genius of its contriver,

 “ when their grand enemy, Shaftesbury, fell into “ the disgrace and punishment which he had pre“ pared for them. They have already forgotten,
 “ that it was on the 9th of June, in the year 1780,
 “ when 100,000 Protestant rioters, who were up
 “ in arms to exterminate them, and who began
 “ to anticipate the horrors of Jacobinism in this “ country, were beyond expectation, and almost “ beyond hope, suppressed, and when they them“ selves, and their country, were thus saved.
 “ To speak the truth, Sir, your candour on this,

* “ The fifth of August was appointed a day of thanksgiving
 “ for James’s deliverance from the Gowry conspiracy; on “ which occasion, if we believe the King himself, he was in “ much greater danger of being assassinated by the Protestant “ Earl of that name and his brother, and afterwards of being “ blown up, with all his attendants, by another Protestant “ gunpowder plot, on the part of the burghers of Perth, than ever
 “ he was from that concerted five years afterwards by Catesby
 “ and his associates. See Collier Ch. Hist. vol. II. pp. 663,

“ as on some other occasions, breaks through the “ cloud of your religious and party zeal. You “ accordingly express a wish, that the commemoration of the powder plot were abolished, as “ ‘ tending to perpetuate ancient animosity;’ and “ you argue very justly on the inconsistency of “ ‘ tolerating the Catholics as friends, and treating them as enemies.’ ”

XVI. 7.

The Oath of Allegiance required from the English Catholics by James I.

After considering, with great attention, what I have written on this subject in my Historical Memoirs, and in my sixteenth letter to Doctor Southey, I find nothing inaccurate in either: Your account of the oath, and of the conduct of the Catholics in respect to it, contains several inaccuracies; some I shall take the liberty to mention.

1.—In page 282, You say, that “ the oath disclaimed the Pope’s deposing power absolutely, and without any qualification.”

Had it rested upon this disclaimer, very few Catholics would have objected to it; but it applied to this doctrine the epithets of “ heretical,” and “ damnable.” To swear that it was heretical, before the church had formally declared that it contained heresy, was objected to by many:—and what is the meaning of the word “ damnable?”

Thus the case stood,—it was not to the doctrine, but to the epithets affixed to it, that the objections were raised.

2.—You say, (page 287), that “the second prohibitory bull of the Pope was obeyed:” This is a mistake; the oath continued, notwithstanding this bull, to be taken by the great majority, both of the Catholic clergy and the Catholic laity.

In the same page, You say, “that the same kind of oath is still required, and that objections of the same nature are still urged.”

This passage contains more mistakes than lines.

1.—The oaths prescribed by the acts of his late Majesty, are not of the same kind as that prescribed by James: they contain unequivocal disclaimers of the deposing doctrine; but they contain none of the objectionable epithets applied to it in James’s oath.

2.—No objection to any of these oaths was ever made by a single Catholic.

3.—There is no division upon these oaths among the Roman Catholics.

4.—They are taken universally, cheerfully, and without the slightest reluctance, by all Catholics who are required or expected to take them.

From these mistaken premises, You draw the most groundless conclusions, and express them in the strongest language.

XVI. 8.

General View of the Laws passed against the Catholics, in the Reigns of Elizabeth and James.

The laws which were passed by the last monarch of the house of Tudor, and the first of the house of Stuart, against the English Catholic subjects, for their religious principles, and the exercise of their religion, were irreconcilable with every principle of justice and humanity:—I shall now present the reader with a succinct view of their general effect and operation.

1.—From the planting of Christianity in our island, till the infant reign of Edward the Sixth, the mass was the solemn service at which the Catholics of England, as their brethren throughout the world, assembled, to express their adoration of the Deity, to commemorate the death and passion of his Son, to thank him for his blessings, and to implore his protection and favour on themselves and their neighbours. It was restored by queen Mary. “We,” it is said in the statute which passed for that purpose, “found it in the Church of England, left to us by the authority of the church.” It was proscribed, and another service substituted in its stead, by Elizabeth; and by a law passed in her reign, a priest who should say or sing mass, was to forfeit two hundred marks, and suffer imprisonment for one twelve-month; and the hearer was to forfeit one hundred marks, and to be imprisoned for six months.

2.—A person who refused to assist at the church service, devised in the reign of Edward the Sixth, and established by the Act of Uniformity, which, whatever might be its merit, was certainly (as it is termed in the statute of queen Mary) “a new thing,” was denominated in the law a recusant; he was to forfeit twelve pence (three shillings in the present value of money) for each Sunday’s absence; was to be presented by the churchwarden to the ecclesiastical court, and there excommunicated; the excommunication was to be certified into Chancery; the writ de excommunicato capiendo was to be issued against him: this authorized the sheriff to break open his house, to attach and imprison him, or to present him at the next assizes; an indictment was then to be framed, to which no plea, but the general issue, or conformity, was to be admitted.

If the indictment was found by the jury, a proclamation was to be made, that the recusant should surrender himself to the sheriff; if he did not appear, or confess the indictment, or if the jury found it against him, he was denominated a recusant convict; his conviction was to be certified into the exchequer; if he had not paid the forfeitures which he had incurred, process was to be awarded for levying them from his lands, goods, and chattels.

3.—Having thus become a recusant convict, he was immediately to pay down the sum of 20*l.* (60*l.* in the present value of money), and from this time, was to pay 20*l.* (60*s.* in the present value of money), a month, and be bound with sufficient sureties for his good behaviour; if he could not pay it, he was to forfeit all his goods, and during his recusancy, two parts of his lands; if afterwards the profits of the two parts of his lands exceeded the 20*l.* (or 60*l.* in the present value of money), monthly, the king was to choose which he would have, the 20*l.* or 60*l.* of our money, or the two parts. *

* In the reign of James, a circumstance of great aggravation attended the penalties of recusancy: "James was surrounded
" by numbers of his indigent countrymen. Their habits were " expensive, their wants many, and their importunities incessant. To satisfy the more clamorous, a new expedient " was devised. The king transferred to them his claims on " some of the more opulent recusants, against whom they were
" at liberty to proceed by law in his name, unless the sufferers
" should submit to compound by the grant of an annuity for " life, or the immediate payment of a considerable sum. This " was at a time when the jealousies between the two nations
" had reached a height of which at the present day we have
" but little conception. Had the money been carried to the " royal coffers, the recusants would have sufficient reason to " complain: but that Englishmen should be placed by their
" king at the mercy of foreigners; that they should be stripped
" of their property to support the extravagance of his Scottish
" minions; this added indignity to injustice, exacerbated their " already wounded feelings, and goaded the most moderate
" almost to desperation."—Lingard's Hist. vol. VI. ch. 1,
p. 29. 4to ed.

" The lay Catholics continued liable to the fines of recusancy, for which the king, according to his own account, received a net income of 36,000 l. per annum. But the statute of 1606 severely aggravated their sufferings. They

4.—These penalties were accompanied by a long train of disabilities. The popish recusant convict was to make no presentation or collation to any advowson, prebend or hospital, either of the gift or foundation of himself or his ancestors; he was not to be an executor, administrator or guardian; nor practise in the common law, the civil law, the canon law, or physic; he was not to be a judge, steward, or minister of courts, or a schoolmaster; or hold any office of public charge, or any office of arms in a ship, a castle, or fortress; his armour was to be taken from him, yet he was to be chargeable as his majesty's other subjects, with finding the usual quota of armour. He was to be confined within five miles of his dwelling; and if without special license, he passed those bounds, he was to forfeit

“ were repeatedly summoned to take the new and disputed “ oath of allegiance; non-attendance was visited with ex“ communication, and the civil consequences of that eccle“ siastical sentence: and the refusal of the oath subjected them
“ to perpetual imprisonment, and the penalties of a præmunire.
“ When the king, in 1616, preparatory to the Spanish match, “ granted liberty to the Catholics confined under the penal “ laws, 4,000 prisoners obtained their discharge. Such at “ least was the number, according to the Puritan writers, whose “ zeal most bitterly laments that so many idolaters should “ be let loose to pollute a soil purified by the true doctrines of “ the Gospel. Another grievance arose from the illegal extor“ tions of the pursuivants. Armed with warrants from the “ magistrates or under-sheriff, they selected a particular dis“ trict, and visited every Catholic family under the pretext of “ enforcing the law. From the poor they generally exacted
“ the sacrifice of their furniture or their cattle: to the more

all his goods, and all his copyhold lands might be seized ; he was not to come into the court of the king or prince, or into the city of London, if he had any dwelling elsewhere, under the penalty of 100*l.* (300*l.* in the present value of money). Finally, he was to be considered as excommunicated in all personal actions, and therefore (which is a necessary consequence of excommunication), he could not either maintain or defend a personal action or suit.

5.—The offence of the popish recusant convict was dreadfully visited on his wife.

If they married according to the Catholic rite, he was to forfeit 100*l.* (300*l.* in the present value of money), if she were convicted of recusancy, he “ wealthy they repeatedly sold their forbearance for large “ sums of money. Experience proved that it was most “ prudent to submit ; the very show of resistance generally “ provoked a forced search, in which plate, jewels, and the “ most valuable effects were carried off as superstitious articles

 “ and the owner was conducted to prison, unless he would “ redeem himself by the payment of a large bribe. These “ excesses attracted the notice of Parliament : a promise of “ redress was given, and a royal proclamation proved, but did “ not abolish the evil.”— Lingard’s History, Vol. VI. chap. iii.

James’s occasional fits of clemency were as disastrous to the Catholics as his severities. He sometimes suspended the exactions of the fines for recusancy, but he afterwards exacted them for the whole period of the suspension. This demand, by crowding several payments into one, reduced many families of moderate incomes to a state of absolute beggary.

forfeited 10 l. (30 l. in the present value of money), monthly, for her, or one-third part out of his own remaining third part of his property; if she survived, she was disabled to be his executrix or administratrix: she was to forfeit two parts of her jointure, or two of her dower; she might, during the marriage, be taken from her husband by a justice of peace, and confined in her house. Though the husband conformed, he was to pay 10 l. (30 l. in the present value of money), monthly, for his recusant wife, and was disabled during her recusancy, from holding any public office in the community.

If she was convicted of being a popish recusant, then, if she was a baroness she might be committed to prison by one of the privy council, or the bishop of the diocese; and if she were under that rank, she might be committed to prison by two justices of the peace, and remain there till she conformed, unless her husband should pay to the king 10 l. a month, (or 30 l. in the present value of money), or the third part of her lands, so long as she continued a recusant, and out of prison.

6. The same persecuting spirit appears in the legislative provision respecting his children.

If he christened them after the Catholic rite, he forfeited 100 l. (300 l. in the present value of money). At nine years of age his children might be presented, and at sixteen indicted for recusancy; at sixteen, the oath of supremacy might be tendered to them. If, to educate his children at home, he kept a schoolmaster, he forfeited, for every day, 40*s.* (6*l.* in the present value of money); if he sent them abroad, he forfeited 100*l.* (300*l.* in the present value of money), and the child was disabled from taking lands by descent or purchase until he conformed.

7. The same spirit extended also to his friends and servants: if he harboured, maintained, or relieved any recusant servant, sojourner or stranger, his father and mother excepted, he forfeited, for every month, 10*l.* (30*l.* in the present value of money).

This act had a dreadful operation. “ Many serviceable men and women,” says a contemporary writer now before me, “ became, in consequence of it, absolutely destitute of succour, and were obliged, in order to obtain employment and food, to travel beyond the five miles within which the law confined them, under the severe penalties which have been mentioned. If they had not the means of paying the forfeitures thus incurred, the law enjoined them to abjure the realm; if they refused, or if, having abjured it, they returned afterwards to it without license, they were to be adjudged felons.”

8. The recusants also were liable to all the severities of the ecclesiastical courts. They might be summoned by the ecclesiastical judges at their pleasure; if they attended, they might be fined at discretion; if they did not attend, they were excommunicated. Attending or not, warrants were generally sent to search and seize their religious books, chalices, and every article which served for use or ornament in their religious worship: the search was generally made with unfeeling contumely.

9. By several acts, some of which were a pleasing, some a necessary attention to his religion, a Catholic was subject to a præmunire: as, 1. The receipt of an agnus dei, a crucifix, beads, or pious medals: 2. Aiding, abetting, taking or giving absolution by a bull from the Pope: 3. Concealing an offer made to him of such a bull: 4. Sending relief to priests beyond seas: 5. Maintaining the Pope's jurisdiction; and, 6. The first refusal of the oath of supremacy.

10. By three acts, the Catholics incurred the penalties of felony: 1. Receiving a priest; 2. Returning from banishment; 3. Departing from the realm, without taking the oath of allegiance.

11. For the oppression of the Catholics, five new treasons were invented: 1. The second refusal of the oath of supremacy; 2. Maintaining, a second time, the Pope's spiritual authority or jurisdiction; 3. Giving or receiving absolution from the see of Rome; 4. Reconciliation or persuasion to the Catholic religion ; 5. Receiving holy orders beyond the seas.

12. Finally, the law pursued them even to the grave: if a recusant convict, man or woman, not being excommunicated, was buried in any other place than in the church, the executors of the person so buried, were to forfeit 20 l. or 60 l. of the present value of money.

13. It should be observed, that the Catholics were subject in the same manner as the Protestant dissenters, to the proceedings of the high commission: how oppressive these were, and how severely the Protestant dissenters suffered under them, is shown in my Historical Memoirs; but as the Catholics were much more odious to the sovereign and the ministers than the Protestants, there is great reason to believe that they suffered much more severely under them. *

14. Add to this,—that even when the laws which have been mentioned were not acted upon, they had a silent, but most bitter operation; they tended to make every Catholic an object of odium, to lessen his few remaining comforts, and to abridge his few remaining rights. When they were withheld or contested, if the Catholic complained or resisted, or resorted to law, he was often reminded that he might be proceeded against for recusancy.

I conclude the statements in my Historical Memoirs of the sufferings of the English Roman Catholics, under the penal codes of Elizabeth and James, with an authentic account, taken from Dodd's Church History, of the sufferings of one Roman Catholic family under them. If there is a person who can read it indifferent and unmoved, I envy not that person his feelings.

What a dreadful scene do these codes exhibit! In what an agony of mind must the general body of Catholics have existed during this period. In less than a century, they reduced to the most abject and miserable poverty the whole Catholic body, with the exception of a few families whose estates were large enough to bear, without exhaustion, this incessant ravin of them!

LETTER XVII.

CHARLES I.

1. YOU say, (page 290), that “ You do not defend the cruel and savage executions of the unfortunate men who were condemned to death for a religion which was thus considered treason.” But, You not only do not condemn,—You repeatedly eulogise the laws written in blood, which made it treason. You mention “ the deep-rooted prejudices and hatred of the people to the members of my communion,” but You say nothing of the most vile arts by which these prejudices and this hatred had been raised.

2. You admit, that “ the Catholics,” in their conduct to Charles I. “ were brave and loyal;” but You allow them no merit for their loyalty. You even say, (p. 291), “ Their bodies were the servants of the prince; their consciences were still obedient to the Pope, who had not directed them to forsake the standard of their sovereign”!!! When You wrote this, did You not recollect that the Pope had directed, and even ordered all the Catholics to forsake the standard of Elizabeth, yet that all the Catholics still adhered to it? After this, You remark, (page 292), that "the loyalty of the Romanists was not conspicuous in behalf of the Brunswick dynasty, " either in 1715 or 1745." If You have read the act passed against the Roman Catholics in the first year of George I,* You must allow, that an exuberance of loyalty could not be expected from them. If You examine the number of his Majesty's subjects who were engaged in the rebellions of 1715 and 1745, You will find the proportion of the Roman Catholics engaged in them so small, as to render the general loyalty of the body unimpeachable. You should have mentioned, that, when, in the reign of the third monarch of the house of Brunswick, all his Protestant colonies in America revolted against him, his only Catholic colony preserved her allegiance inviolate.

I believe You are the only writer who has denied the merit of loyalty to the conduct of the Roman Catholics, while England was threatened by the Spanish armada, or during the grand rebellion.

LETTER XVIII.

CHARLES II.—JAMES II.

1. YOU defend, (page 293), the breach of faith of Charles II. on his Restoration. You describe it as a failure of faith to his Catholic subjects only, and justify it by “the national dislike of them at “this period.”

In this representation of the transaction there is great inaccuracy:—1st. Charles plighted his faith not to the Roman Catholics only; he plighted it also to the Protestant Dissenters: 2d. In regard to these, the national dislike of Catholics could have no concern: 3d. But the national dislike of Catholics or Puritans had no existence at the time of which we are speaking.

In the first years of the monarch's reign, all was good humour and brotherly love between the Church of England and the Roman Catholics.

The adversaries of the Catholics, and the party who strove to render Charles II. unpopular, excited the national hatred of them by degrees: it was consummated by wickedly imputing to them the fire of London. This, You do not mention; but surely, when You describe in such strong terms the hatred which You say the nation bore to the Catholics, justice required of You to mention how much of this hatred was owing to the calumnies propagated against them? to the Tall Bully?

2. You notice, (page 294), my comparison of the breach of the promises made by Charles II. at the Revolution, to the breach of the promises made by Mr. Pitt at the Union. We are grateful to Mr. Pitt for his exertions to redeem his promise; we respect the conscientious feelings of Geo. III. which withheld his sanction of them; but no such royal feelings now existing, we think ourselves entitled to the performance of the promise: national honour and sound policy equally require it.

3. In Your eulogy of Doctor Southey, (p. 295), You represent me as having challenged him and begun the controversy. By his "Book of the Church," he threw out the challenge: I took it up,—I can truly say much against my will.—I trust he has found in me a fair and an honourable adversary. I respect him, but I fear him not.

4. You barely mention the Corporation Act: I shall only say, that it is hard upon the Catholics to suffer by an act, which, by the confession, I believe of all, was not designed to operate against them.

5. You say little on the Test Act: So far as respects its real purpose,—securing the Protestant succession to the throne,—we have no objection to it: we have sworn to support that succession, and though You assert the contrary, our oaths may be depended upon.

6. You proceed, (page 296 and 297), to mention and express Your high approbation of the act which excludes Roman Catholics from the senate. In my letter to Dr. Southey, I have observed, at some length, upon this act. I avail myself of this opportunity to offer the following observation upon it.

“ The all accomplished St. John,” as Mr. Pope calls that distinguished infidel, John Viscount Bolingbroke, had forsworn his allegiance to his sovereign; had conspired to dethrone the house of Hanover; had invited the French into this country; had planned the subversion of its government; had, in short, become a traitor, with every kind of aggravation of which treason is susceptible.

Now, in what manner was this traitor to his God, his king, and his country, punished?

This traitor to his God, his king, and his country, was punished by a less severe punishment than that, by which the Duke of Norfolk, the Earl of Shrewsbury, and the other Catholic peers now suffer; and under which You wish them to suffer till the end of time. The traitor was permitted to live; to hold his titles and possessions, and to transmit them to his children; he was only excluded from sitting and voting in parliament. But this exclusion was made personal to himself, and was not to operate on his children. Now this very exclusion, which the legislature thought an adequate punishment for the crimes of this infidel, this recreant, this traitor, but which it did not inflict on his successors in the peerage, as it does on the Catholics, successors of Catholic peers :—This exclusion, this very exclusion, is the actual doom of the noble, the honourable, and the honoured Catholic peers of this realm ;—men never mentioned without reverence and regard ; is inflicted on all their Catholic successors, and cheered by You.

7.—You tell me, (page 297), that “ I vehemently object to the epithets, ‘ idolatrous and ‘ superstitious,’ which the oath applies to transubstantiation and the invocation of the saints, and that I attempt to prove that no Protestant is justified in making this assertion.”

In my eighteenth letter to Dr. Southey, I suggest that the immense number of Christians who believe in transubstantiation ; the large proportion of Protestants, who believe in consubstantism ; and the opinions of many distinguished Protestants, who, without believing in either, think there is idolatry in neither,—showed that the alledged idolatry of the belief in transubstantiation, was problematical. I then proceed to observe, that “ the sacredness of an oath, which never should be taken, if that which is sworn to admit of reasonable doubt ;” that “ good sense, which is shocked by the language of the declaration ;” that “ the terms of “ amity which subsist between the United Kingdom

 “ and many Catholic states, and which render the “ declaration an uncivil state paper; the littleness
 “ of wounding unnecessarily the feelings of that “ proportion of the community which is Catholic,
 “ (for a Protestant is not more hurt at a Turk’s “ calling him a Christian dog, than a Catholic is “ at calling him an Idolater);—the impolicy of “ keeping any thing in existence, which unneces“ sarily insults and irritates;—the acknowledged “ wisdom and expediency of every legislature and “ ministerial measure which promotes a reciprocity
 “ of good-will and conciliation, and above all THE “ MERITS,—I confidently said, and say,—THE “ MERITS OF THE CATHOLICS, seem to point out
 “ the necessity of repealing the objectionable and “ inofficious declaration.”

Upon these suggestions, You express yourself,
 (page 297), in the following terms:—

8.—“ With respect to transubstantiation,—We “ have no other words to express our opinion of “ him, who kneels down to a thin bread-cake, after
 “ the priest has blessed it, believing that the pal“ pable substance is the very and material blood
 “ and bones of him who is in heaven. If we had “ more expressive terms than these, we would use “ them to describe our opinion of him ‘ who taketh
 “ flour, and with part thereof he maketh bread,
 “ he eateth, and is satisfied; with part thereof
 “ he maketh a God; he falleth down, yea, he “ worshippeth it.’ What shall we say? We may “ not assert that all this is idolatrous and super“ stitious. O! no! we must repel the thought,

 “ as blasphemy! Kneel on then, and cry aloud,
 “ for it is a God; for the flour was good—and
 “ the water was good—and the priest was rightly “ ordained—and the worshipper believeth not his “ senses—nor his understanding—nor his reason,
 “ nor the Scripture.”

The language in which You express yourself in this passage,—I leave to the taste, the feeling and reflection of every gentleman in the world.

I wished to say nothing further upon it: but I feel it calls on me to declare, that it is a great misrepresentation of the Roman Catholic doctrine of transubstantiation. The Roman Catholic church does not believe that “ the priest maketh a God :” she believes it to be heresy, to be folly, to be impiety to say this. She believeth, that, when the priest pronounces the words of consecration, God, by his omnipotence, works the mysterious change.

Roman Catholics “ do not fall down before the “ bread; do not worship it.” They fall down before Jesus Christ, whom they believe to be present under the form and the appearance of the bread: Him, alone, they worship.

Your representation of our doctrine contains other inaccuracies.

9.—You then, (p 298), mention Oates's plot,—but without a single word of condemnation of the actors in it: You coolly tell us, that, “ if the gun“ powder plot had not been planned, Oates’s plot

 “ would never have been believed.”—This shows the enormous guilt of those, who, without any evidence, fabricated the calumny that the gunpowder plot was planned by the Roman Catholics. In this enormous guilt, all participate who perpetuate this slander of them.

Even,—if the gunpowder plot had been planned in the very manner asserted by these calumniators, it would not have justified the legal murders perpetrated during the period of Oates’s plot.
 But the gunpowder plot was not so planned: the body of the Roman Catholics had no concern in it: they reprobated it at the time, they reprobate now, as much as Protestants.

10.—We reach, (page 298), the reign of James II:—It contains your last charge,—and last misrepresentation.

“ What credit,” You exclaim, “ can be given “ to the advocates of your communion, when they “ read in the pages of the most candid and “ accomplished of their number, the declara“ tion of his opinion, that ‘ the measures of James
 “ may be denominated a project for effecting a “ general religious toleration.’ ”

My language is as follows:—“ In my Histo“ rical Memoirs of the English, Irish, and Scottish “ Catholics, I have expressed my sentiments upon

“ the conduct of James II. My opinion is, that in theory, his project for effecting a general religious toleration, was entitled to praise ; but as the public mind was not disposed to receive it favourably, it was unwise, and the measures which he adopted for carrying it into execution, were unconstitutional.”

In the exposition which you give of this passage, there are both great misrepresentation and great concealment.

1st.—You make me say, that “ the measures of James might be denominated a project for effecting a general religious toleration.” I neither say, nor believe that they may be so denominated.

One, of James’s projects was to effect a general religious toleration ; but he had other projects in contemplation,—particularly the introduction of arbitrary power. To describe them all by the words you cite, would be great inaccuracy, and I have not been guilty of it. I have only mentioned his “ project for effecting a general religious toleration.” and said nothing of the others.

2dly.—In this passage, You—(although you had inserted them in the preceding page)—omit altogether the important words, “ in theory.”

3dly.—You wholly conceal my explicit assertion of the folly and unconstitutionality of James’s measures.

4thly.—In my “ Historical Memoirs,”* I have

* Vol. IV.

inserted a long note, to expose the futility of the arguments used by the advocates of James, in favour of the dispensing power which he claimed.

—This, too, You conceal.

5thly.—Finally, You also conceal my statements in my letter to Dr. Southey, that “None disproved of James’s measures more than the Catholics;” and my quotation from Hume, “that all judicious persons of the Catholic communion, were disgusted with them, and foresaw their consequences;” that “Lord Arundell, Lord Powis, and Lord Bellaryse, remonstrated against them, and suggested more moderate councils;” and that, “when Lord Tyrconnel disclosed James’s plan for catholicising Ireland, Lord Bellaryse declared his majesty was a fool and a madman, enough to ruin ten kingdoms.”

11.—To the Bill of Rights and the Act of Settlement, no portion of his Majesty’s subjects, more constitutionally submit than the Roman Catholics: they only suggest, that no construction of the Bill of Rights, and no inferences from it, should be adopted to their prejudice, unless they are warranted by a fair construction of the words of the Act. THEY PROTEST AGAINST ANY INTERPRETATION OF THEM, THAT AMOUNT TO LEGISLATION.

I beg leave to add, that, so far from wishing to conceal the illaudable conduct of any Catholic, during the period in question, I have inserted, in my Historical Memoirs,* a fuller and clearer account of the very reprehensible practices of, what I term, the Spanish faction, than is to be found in any writer, Protestant or Catholic.

I have the honour to be,

with the greatest respect,

Your most obedient servant,

CHARLES BUTLER.

Lincoln's-Inn,
4th November 1825.

P. S.—SINCE the former sheets were printed, I have recollected a fact which strongly confirms what I have said in the third and ninth of the preceding letters. I transcribe the relation of it, from a Pastoral Instructioun, published in 1793, by Doctor Troy, the Roman Catholic archbishop in Dublin : †

“ The Roman Catholic archbishops of Ireland, at their meeting in Dublin, in 1791, addressed a letter to the Pope, wherein they described the misrepresentations that had been recently published of

* Ch. XXXVI. & LI. Vol. III. p. 14 & 223.

† Printed by Coghlan, in Duke-street, and inserted by the late Sir John Hippisley, in “ The Substance of a Speech intended to be delivered in the House of Commons, on the 10th May 1805.”—Keating and Brown, Duke-street.

“ their consecration oath, and the great injury to the “ Catholic body arising from them :—they expressed “ their fullest conviction, that the oath, obliging
 “ them only to canonical obedience to his Holiness,
 “ and communion with the centre of unity, was perfectly “ reconcilable with their loyalty as subjects,
 “ and the allegiance they had sworn to their gra“ cious sovereign King George III. :—they pro“ fessed a determination to observe both oaths,
 “ and to preserve their communion with the Holy “ See inviolate. Reflecting, however, on the igno“ rance of most Protestants respecting the oath,
 “ with which they seemed only acquainted from
 “ the calumnious publications against it, the pre“ lates above-mentioned suggested to the Pope,
 “ that some declaration or explanation of the oath,
 “ and particularly of the words—Hæreticos per- “ sequar et impugnabo, from himself, or by his “ authority, would probably remove the alarms of “ well meaning Protestants, and confound the “ prejudiced, who, by their misrepresentations of “ the oath, endeavoured to blast the prospects and “ expectations of Catholics to obtain an eman“ cipation from the penal code ; which they had “ reason to hope for, from the clemency of his “ Majesty, and the wisdom of the legislature.

“ After due deliberation at Rome, the congrega“ tion of cardinals, appointed to superintend
 “ the ecclesiastical affairs of these kingdoms, re“ turned an answer, (of which the following is an “ extract), by the authority and command of his “ Holiness :—

“ Most Illustrious and most Reverend Lords, “ as Brothers.*

“ WE perceive from your late letter, the great “ uneasiness you labour under since the publica“ tion of a pamphlet, entitled, The present State
 “ of the Church of Ireland, from which our “ detractors have taken occasion to renew the old “ calumny against the Catholic religion with in“ creased acrimony ; namely, that this religion is “ by no means compatible with the safety of kings
 “ and republics ; because, as they say, the Roman “ Pontiff being the father and master of all Ca- “ tholics, and invested with such great authority,
 “ that he can free the subjects of other kingdoms
 “ from their fidelity and oaths of allegiance to kings
 “ and princes, he has it in his power, they con- “ tend, to cause disturbances, and injure the public “ tranquillity of kingdoms with ease. We wonder “ that you could be uneasy at these complaints, “ especially after your most excellent brother and “ apostolical fellow labourer, the archbishop of “ Cashel,† and other strenuous defenders of the “ rights of the Holy See, had evidently refuted
 “ and explained away these slanderous reproaches,
 “ in their celebrated writings.”

* “ The original Latin will be found in opposite columns
 “ in “ Dr. Troy’s Pastoral Instruction, 1793.”—(Coghlan, “ Duke-street.”

† “ Dr. James Butler.”

“ In this controversy a most accurate discrimina“ tion should be made between the genuine rights
 “ of the Apostolical See, and those that are imputed
 “ to it by innovators of this age, for the purpose of “ calumniating. The See of Rome never taught that “ faith is not to be kept with the heterodox:—that
 “ an oath to kings separated from the Catholic “ communion, can be violated: that it is lawful for
 “ the Bishop of Rome to invade their temporal “ rights and dominions. We too consider an “ attempt or design against the lives of kings and “ princes, even under the pretext of religion, as an “ HORRID AND DETESTABLE CRIME.”

“ His Holiness Pius VI. has not, however, “ disregarded your requests; and therefore, in “ order to effectually remove every occasion of “ cavil and calumny, which, as you write, some “ borrow from the words in the form of oath of “ obedience to the Apostolical See, that bishops “ are required to take at their consecration, *I will “ prosecute and oppose heretics, &c. to the utmost of “ my power; which words are maliciously inter“ preted as the signal of war against heretics, “ authorising persecution and assault against them,
 “ as enemies; whereas the pursuit and opposition
 “ to heretics, which the bishops undertake, are to

* “ No one word in the English language corresponds exactly
 “ to PERSEQUAR, as used here. It never signifies PERSECU-“ TION.—We have adopted the Bishop of Cloyne’s translation “ of it.—See Dr. Butler’s Justification, p. 85. et seq.—[Note of “ Dr. Troy.”]

“ be understood as referring to their solicitude and “ efforts in convincing heretics of their errors, and “ procuring their reconciliation with the Catholic “ church: his Holiness has graciously conde“ scended to substitute, in place of the ancient “ form of oath, that one which was publicly re“ peated by the archbishop of Mohilow, to the “ great satisfaction of all the court of Petersburg,
 “ in presence of the empress, and which we trans“ mit to you in this letter.”

“ We think proper, notwithstanding, to remind
 “ you of a late admonition of the most wise Pope “ Benedict XIV. who, in his regulations for the “ English missions, which are likewise applicable “ to you, speaks thus:—The Vicars Apostolic are “ to take diligent care that the missionaries
 “ behave on all occasions with integrity and deco- “ rum, and thus become good models to others; and “ particularly that they be always ready to cele- “ brate the sacred offices, to communicate proper “ instruction to the people, and to comfort the sick
 “ with their assistance; that they, by all means,
 “ avoid public assemblies of idle men, and taverns.
 “ The Vicars themselves are particularly “ charged to punish in such manner as they can,
 “ but severely, all those who do not speak of the “ public government with respect.”

The pontifical order for the alteration of the pontifical oath, to be taken by the Irish Catholic prelates follows, viz.—

“ From an audience had of his Holiness on the 9th day of June 1791.

“ The archbishops, metropolitans of the king“ dom of Ireland, represented to his Holiness, “ that, from the ignorance or malice of some “ persons, certain expressions in the form of the “ oath prescribed by the Roman ritual to be taken
 “ by bishops at their consecration, and by arch“ bishops on receiving the pall, have been mis“ represented; which has added new perplexities
 “ to those which they daily experience in a king“ dom where the Catholic faith is not the religion
 “ of the state: wherefore they humbly requested,
 “ if it should appear expedient to his Holiness,
 “ that he would vouchsafe to apply a remedy by “ some of his apostolical vigilance. His Holiness, “ on this report being made to him by me, the “ underwritten, all circumstances of the case ma-“ turely considered, was graciously pleased to “ grant, that the bishops of the kingdom of Ire“ land, at their consecration, and the archbishops “ on receiving the pall, may use the same form of “ oath which was taken by the archbishop of “ Mohilow,* in the empire of the Muscovites, by “ permission of his said Holiness, which is as “ follows:—

“ I, N. N. &c. as in the Roman pontifical “ to the clause—All heretics, schismatics, and “ rebels against our said Lord, and his successors

* “ Mohilow was erected into an archbishopric, with “ a chapter, by the present Pope. The first archbishop, “ Stanislaos Siestrzenawez, was appointed in a consistory at “ Rome, 21st December 1783, and is still living.”

“ aforesaid, I will to the utmost of my power,
 “ *prosecute and oppose, which is entirely omitted.
 “ Afterwards, the words—the Cardinal Prefect of “ the sacred congregation for propagating the “ faith, are substituted instead of the Cardinal
 “ Preponent in the congregation of the Sacred
 “ Council. The form concludes with these words :
 “ I will observe all and every one of these things
 “ the more inviolably, as I am firmly convinced “ that there is nothing contained in them which “ can be contrary to the fidelity I owe to the most “ serene King of Great Britain and Ireland, and
 “ to his successors to the throne. So help me, God,
 “ and those holy Gospels of God. Thus I promise
 “ and engage.

TRANSCRIPTIONS

FOURTH LETTER ADDRESSED BY DOCTOR PHILLPOTTS
TO MR. BUTLER, CONTAINING A CHARGE BROUGHT BY HIM AGAINST DOCTOR LINGARD.

DOCTOR LINGARD'S REPLY.

DOCTOR HENRY PHILLPOTTS, D.D. Rector of Stanhope, in the diocese of Durham, has published "Letters to Charles Butler, esq. on the Theological Parts of his Book of the Roman Catholic Church, with Remarks on certain Works of Doctor Milner and Doctor Lingard, and on some parts of the Evidence of Doctor Doyle before the Committees of the Houses of Parliament."

The fourth of these Letters is entitled, "Doctor Lingard: his Unfaithfulness in Translation." This letter, and Doctor Lingard's reply to it, in a letter, which he has done the writer of the preceding letter the honour to address to me, are now presented to the reader.

I.

DOCTOR PHILLPOTTS'S CHARGE.

"IN inquiring, in my last letter, into the Acts of the II. Nicene Council, I said that " Dr. Lingard protests altogether against such inquiry, and declares that your Church acknow“ ledges only the Council’s doctrinal decree “ passed in its last session.” In answer to this statement, I then satisfied myself with showing, that the previous Acts of the Council are admitted, as authoritative, even by the Trent Catechism. But, as this Council’s proceedings have been found very important in my view of the doctrine of your Church respecting Images, I now think it right to give more particular attention to Dr. Lingard’s assertions, and shall thus at the same time fulfil my promise of addressing to you a few words respecting Dr. Lingard himself.

That gentleman is, I believe, among the most distinguished living writers of your Church. By yourself he is repeatedly mentioned in terms of very high respect: for although he is not cited as one of your Vouchers for the doctrines of your Church, yet as an historian, he is warmly commended by you, more especially for his accuracy and precision, and for “ constantly citing “ the authorities upon which his relations are “ founded.”* It is said, indeed, by those who have read his history, (I am not in that number), that the main part of your historical facts are derived from him.

It is plain, therefore, on all these accounts, that it will be by no means a superfluous labour, to dwell a little more at large on the manner in which he has treated the II. Nicene Council. The result may not only be useful in establishing more fully the authority of that Council's Acts, a matter of much moment in the inquiry in which I am engaged;—but it may also afford a specimen of the method in which your modern ecclesiastical historian disposes of subjects which are not quite agreeable to him, and may thus assist his readers in estimating the value of his authority in all questions of doubtful evidence.

* “ Book,” &c. p. 28. note, and p. 193.

I have said that I am not in the number of those who have read Dr. Lingard's history; and I will frankly tell you my reason.

It happened to me, several years ago, to be engaged in a controversy with him,—the attack and defence of a charge delivered by the present Bishop of Durham: and, on that occasion, I had so frequent opportunities of experiencing the very peculiar use, which he thinks himself at liberty to make of the writings of ancient authors, that I felt no inclination to sit down to a work of his, the merit of which must entirely depend on his faithfulness to the authorities which he cites.

In the course of our controversy, I made pretty copious extracts from the Acts of the II. Nicene Council, (of which, indeed, I have not scrupled to avail myself in my preceding letter to you): and in his answer, which closed the controversy, he makes the statement to which I have before referred. “The Acts of this Council,” says he, “are of no authority in the “ Catholic Church. We assent, indeed, to the “ doctrinal decree passed in the last session, “ which was approved by the Popes: but in the “ Acts and Canons much is contained to which the “ Roman Church would never impart its sanction.

“ Quæ apud nos nec habentur, nec admittuntur,
“ says Anastasius Bibliothecarius, a Roman writer
“ of the same age.”*

This passage was not much regarded by me at the time when I first read it; and I never reverted to it, till my attention was recalled to these matters by my present correspondence with you. I then determined to investigate the grounds of a statement, which I was confident was unfounded, but which I never before had thought worth examining. I now proceed to give you the result of my inquiries. It will be found, that not a single point, whether affirmed, or insinuated, in the passage which I have cited from Dr. Lingard, (except your Church’s admission of the final Decree of the Council), is there truly stated by him.

First, Dr. Lingard is pleased to say of his alleged authority, Anastasius Bibliothecarius, in order to give the greater weight to his testimony, that he was “ a Roman author of the same age” with the Council. Now, so far is this from being the case, that the tract of Anastasius, from which Dr. Lingard makes his quotation, is inscribed to

* Lingard’s Tracts, p. 238.

Pope John VIII. who did not succeed to the Papal Chair till near a hundred years later.*

In the next place, Dr. Lingard is so good as to give us the testimony of Anastasius to this alleged fact, that "in the Acts and Canons of the Council much is contained to which the Roman Church would never impart its sanction; quæ apud nos nec habentur, nec admittuntur." Now, viewing this representation in the most favourable light, it is exactly of that kind which a man of real veracity would scorn to make; but which one, who halted between the inclination to mis-state and the fear of being exposed in his dishonesty, might bring himself to fancy at once serviceable and safe.

The words of Anastasius (to which, by the way, Dr. Lingard with all his accuracy in citing authorities, gives us no further clue than the name of the author) occur in a very short "Preface to the Seventh Synod" (the second Nicene) interpreted and edited by him. He was, as his title denotes, the Pope's librarian, and by virtue of that office, had access to all the Papal records and monuments. He had translated the eighth General Council, and thought it, therefore, unfit, that the seventh should remain locked up either in the original or in an existing translation, which was so very bad, as to be hardly intelligible. In the course of his further observations, he says,

* The Council sate A. D. 787; John VIII. was elected Pope A. D. 873. vid. Baron. Ann.

as follows ; “ Sanè notandum est, quædam in hac “ Synodo ex Apostolorum et Sextæ Universalis
 “ Synodi Canonibus et Sententiis inveniri, quæ “ penes nōs interpretata nec habentur, nec admit-“ tuntur.”

This sentence contains the raw material, out of which Dr. Lingard has wrought a main part of his very ingenious statement. On comparing the two passages, it will be perceived, that much of what is most important in the original is loosely slurred over by Dr. Lingard, and, in particular, that the word interpretata, which could not be made to accord with his views, is actually struck out of the clause which he professes to cite verbatim. But in order to make the whole case better understood, I will beg leave to state the following facts connected with it.

Neither in the fifth, nor in the sixth General Councils, were any Canons set forth. To supply this defect, certain Prelates (some of whom had sate in the sixth Council) met in a Council, called, from its purpose, “ Quinisextum ;” * they there set forth Canons, and said that these Canons had before been passed at the sixth General Council. This “ Concilium Quinisextum,” not having been duly summoned, and its acts not having received the approbation of the Pope, was never acknowledged at Rome, Nevertheless, the Greeks, as appears from what Tarasias, Patriarch of Constantinople, says in the fourth Actio of the second Nicene Council, received these Canons as Canons of the sixth General Council.

* Πενθεκτη ; fifth-sixth.

The Latins were not so ready to own them by that name, nor, indeed, to give them any sanction whatever. But as this seventh General, or second Nicene Council, adopting some of these Canons, and thus giving to them the sanction of the Church, calls them Canons of the sixth General Council, Anastasius thinks it necessary to explain what must otherwise seem very strange to his Latin readers, and this he does in the passage cited above. "It is worthy of remark," says Anastasius, that "there are found in this " Council some things from the Apostolic Canons, " and from the Canons and Decisions of the sixth " General Council, which are not contained in the " documents of that Council which we have in " our possession (penes nos), translated into Latin, " (interpretata,)* nor are they admitted by us." He then speaks of both the Apostolic and the other Canons, and says, that John VIII. had now admitted all the Canons of all Popes, Fathers and Councils, which had preceded him, provided they were not contrary to faith and morals. "Therefore," he adds, "the Rules which the " Greeks say were set forth by the sixth Council, " the See of Rome admits in such manner in this

* That this is his meaning, is made still plainer by what he says a little afterwards, incognitæ quia nec interpretatæ.

“ seventh Council, that still those of them which “ contradict former canons or decrees of Popes or “ sound morals, are in no measure received : ” *
 but it is manifest, that those which are admitted by the seventh Council, and have thus the authority of the Church given to them, are not in the rejected class ; nor, indeed, till this bold attempt of Dr. Lingard, were they ever pretended to be.

Does this sufficiently establish the unfairness of this writer, his intentional garbling, his gross misrepresentation of the passage which he cites ?
 will it be contended, that he has erred through inadvertence, or in ignorance ? This can hardly be believed : for neither inadvertence, nor ignorance, can account for the omission of a part of the words of his author, so important that the sense of the passage is wholly subverted by the omission.

But I pass to another part of the case. Dr.
 Lingard directly affirms, that “ the Acts of this “ Council,” as contradistinguished from “ the “ doctrinal decree passed in the last session,”
 “ are of no authority in the Catholic Church.”
 I defy him to produce evidence of this assertion.
 Meanwhile, not only does the Catechism of the

* “ Ergo regulas, quas Græci a sextâ synodo perhibent edi-

Council of Trent, as we have already seen, recognise those Acts; but Bellarmine, in his book “de Conciliis,” reckons the second Nicene Council as the seventh of those “eighteen, of which there is not one, that is not approved by the Pope, and received by Catholics;” * and this extends to the whole of the Acts of these eighteen, not to any particulars only: for he next specifies in a different class those which are “partly confirmed, partly rejected,” † as the Council of Constance, a part only of whose sessions is accepted, and the “Concilium Quinisextum,” whose Canons, though the Pope was not present at it either in person, or by his Legates, are “partly approved, because they have afterwards had the approbation of the Pope, or of other lawful Councils, such, for instance, as its eighty-second Canon ‘de pingendis Imaginibus,’ which was received by Pope Adrian and the seventh Synod (the second Nicene), as appears from that very Synod, Act two and four.”

Thus does your greatest and most learned divine recognise the authority of these acts of the second Nicene Council, as a matter of course. Indeed, he elsewhere says, “Si ergò ullum est Concilium generale legitimum, certè hoc est:” ‡ a declaration of no trifling importance to my argument, not only as against Dr. Lingard, but also as fixing on your Church the full responsibility for all this Council's proceedings.

But Dr. Lingard's delinquencies do not end here. He insinuates (and an honest man ought to feel, that to insinuate what is untrue is as bad, as to affirm it)—Dr. Lingard, I say, insinuates, that only “the doctrinal decree passed “in the last session,” not the acts of this Council at its other sessions, “was approved by the “Popes.”

This is as utterly unfounded as the rest. It is true, we learn from Bellarmine, that it had been asserted in the very age of the Council, that it had not the approbation of the Pope; but this assertion extended to the whole of the Council's proceedings, including its final decree; it would, therefore, if true, prove too much for Dr. Lingard's purpose;—nay, it went further; for, it was accompanied with a charge against the Council of maintaining a doctrine, the very contrary to what is declared in that final decree, namely, that Latria is due to Images. How, therefore, does Bellarmine treat these averments? These are his words: “Verè mendacia esse, et quòd Synodus “Nicæna caruerit Papæ Auctoritate, et quòd “decreverit imagines adorandus culta latriæ, cer- “tissimum est.” “For,” says he, “in this very “Council, Act 2. are recited the Letters of Adrian “in favour of Images, and in all the Acts the “ Legates of Rome are the first who subscribe

“ their names.”*

Lastly, there is actually stronger and more particular evidence of the approbation of the Pope having been given to the Acts of this Council, than to those of any other Council whatsoever, For, in the very volume † from which Dr. Lingard cites his passage from Anastasius, there is a long defence of the Acts of the Council, extending to particulars which occur in every one of the Acts separately, addressed to Charlemagne, by the very Pope Adrian I., who by his Legates presided at it.

I have here done with Dr. Lingard; and am sorry that I have been obliged to detain you so long with this discussion respecting him; a discussion which, I fear, not even the interest excited in you for the reputation of a friend, can have wholly prevented from being tedious. Perhaps, however, you will by this time understand, why I now attend “ not to what Dr. Lingard may say, but to what he may prove:” and that to a history by that writer I do not attend at all.

Let us pass to something else.”

DOCTOR LINGARD'S REPLY
TO THE CHARGE BROUGHT AGAINST HIM IN THE PRECEDING LETTER.

Dear Sir,

SEVENTEEN years have rolled away since I met Dr. Phillpotts in the field of controversy. In most cases so long a cessation of hostilities would have sufficed to extinguish every angry feeling, if any such had been excited by the preceding contest. But with Dr. Phillpotts it seems to be otherwise. The intemperate attack which that learned divine has been pleased to make upon me, in his letters recently addressed to you, will justify a suspicion that angry feelings are still cherished in his breast, and that still Hæret lateri lethalis arundo.

During that controversy, in the year 1808, it was my fortune to convict him of having published an unfaithful translation of an ancient document: and now, in 1825, even while he tacitly admits the charge, by adopting in his letters to you a more accurate version (see p. 86), he seeks to retaliate, by accusing me of having made, at the same time, an unfaithful quotation. I was content with pointing out his offence: he goes further, and infers, from the charge against me, that I am totally unworthy of belief. But I may ask, is he not then bound by his own rule? If the mere charge of unfaithful quotation be sufficient to impair my credit, does it not follow, that the charge of unfaithful translation, not merely made, but proved and admitted, has already destroyed his?

It is the usual resource of a skilful disputant, when he feels himself too closely pressed, to divert the attack of his adversary by bringing forward new subjects of discussion. Availing himself of this manœuvre, Dr. Phillpotts, in the controversy to which I have alluded, introduced, rather awkwardly, two long disquisitions on the second Council of Nice, and on the opinions of the ancient schoolmen respecting images: the same disquisitions in fact, which he has reprinted in his late publication, as if they were something new, and had never been answered. Yet Dr. Phillpotts knows that I returned an answer, which by many readers was considered satisfactory, and in which I ventured to expose what I deemed his misstatements, to supply his omissions, and to controvert his arguments. But of all this he appears to remember nothing: his recollection serves him only to refer to a short passage, which I shall now transcribe for the satisfaction of the reader.

Addressing him, I said, " You will probably be still more surprised, when I venture to inform you that the Acts of this Council " (the daily reports of the speeches and proceedings in the second Council of Nice) " are of no authority in the Ca“ tholic Church. We assent, indeed, to the doctrinal decree passed in the last session, which was approved by the Popes : but in the Acts and Canons much is contained, to which the Roman Church would never impart its sanction. ‘ Quæ apud nos nec habentur, nec admittuntur,’ says Anastatius Bibliothecarius, a Roman writer of the same age.”

This passage was then neglected by Dr. Phillpotts : it is only of late that he has thought it worth his notice. On examining the work of Anastatius, preparatory to the publication of his letters to you, he discovered some discrepancy between the quotation and the original. Immediately his ire against me was rekindled : he sat down to compose a chapter under the head of “ Dr. Lingard: his Unfaithfulness in Quotation;” and spread the puny efforts of his vengeance over the surface of no fewer than a dozen pages. Those who have read the former controversy between us, know how to appreciate the assertions of Dr. Phillpotts : but, as others may be imposed upon by that tone of confidence and superiority which he assumes, I shall here beg leave to notice the principal of his objections.

1°.—He denies that Anastatius was a writer of the same age.—If by the same age we are necessarily left to understand the same century, I must own that the expression was not strictly correct. I conceive that I called him so, because he wrote within a hundred years after the Council, and in the midst of the contestations to which it gave rise. But, in reality, the later he wrote, the better it is for my argument: since his testimony shows (I shall prove it hereafter), that up to that period the Roman church had refused its sanction to certain things contained in the Acts and Canons of the second Nicene Council.

2°.—He next reproaches me with the intentional suppression of the word “interpretata” in the text of Anastatius.—Whence the omission of the word arose, whether from the negligence of the printer, or from my own inadvertence, it is not in my power, at the distance of seventeen years, to discover. That it was not intentional, is most evident. The omission could not strengthen my cause; it could not weaken his. The word had nothing to do with the question between us, which regarded not the translation, but the admission or non-admission of certain Canons by the Roman Church.

3°.—These, however, are but trifles. “The head and front of my offending” consists in this; that, according to Dr. Phillpotts, the passage from Anastatius does not bear in the original the meaning which it is made to bear in my pages. Hence, he charges me with “unfairness, with intentional garbling, with gross misrepresentation, with doing that which a man of real veracity would scorn to do, but which one who halted between the inclination to mis-state, and the fear of being exposed in his dishonesty, might “ bring himself to fancy at once serviceable and “ safe.”—At such language I feel no surprize : it is familiar to the rector of Stanhope : seventeen years ago he displayed his proficiency in the art of abusing his adversary. To it therefore I shall return no other answer now, than what I returned then. I shall only say with the poet, that

A moral, sensible, and well-bred man
Will not offend me, and no other can.

But I owe it to myself, and to the reader, to disprove the charge, and to show that it is entirely founded on the mistakes of the man who made it.

The passage from Anastatius stands thus in the original : “ Sane notandum est quædam in hac synodo ex apostolorum et sextæ universalis synodi canonibus inveniri, quæ penes nos interpretata nec habentur, nec admittuntur.” Perhaps I need say no more. The meaning of these words is so very obvious, that the reader, if he recollect that they were written eighty years after the Council, must, I think, pronounce in my favour.

But to preclude the very possibility of cavil, I will observe, that in the ancient church there were two collections of Canons, called Apostolic Canons, one of which contained fifty, the other eighty-five articles. In 691, a synod of bishops, assembled by the emperor Justinian II. in Constantinople, and since called the council Quini-sexth or in Trullo, decreed one hundred and two Canons of discipline, by the second of which the observance of the eighty-five Apostolic Canons was strongly enforced. But the following year Pope Sergius rejected the Council and its Canons, and in 769 Stephen IV. decreed that the fifty Apostolic Canons and no more, should be observed.

Thus the matter rested till the second Council of Nice, in 787. By this both the larger collection of Apostolic Canons, and that of the Council in Trullo, were not only quoted with applause, but approved and confirmed in the strongest terms. But the Roman Church did not bend to the authority of the Council: it still adhered to its former decisions; and the two codes of Canons remained without force, and almost unknown, till the pontificate of John VIII. That Pope, about the year 872, probably as a measure of conciliation, made a general order, that all Canons of the Apostles and Councils should be admitted under certain limitations, by which were excluded such Canons among them, as might be contrary to faith, or morals, or the previous constitutions of the Roman Pontiffs. Perhaps Dr. Phillpotts may think this order an admission of the Canons approved by the second Nicene Council. But it was far otherwise. The Council commanded all the Canons of both collections to be observed: the Pope excepted several. We are assured of it by Anastatius himself. Ergo regulas quas Græci a sexta synodo perhibent editas, ita in hac (Nicæna) synodo principalis sedes admittit, ut nullatenus ex his illæ recipiantur, quæ prioribus canonibus vel decretis sanctorum hujus sedis pontificum, aut certe bonis moribus inveniuntur adversæ. Let the reader, with this information before him, peruse once more the passage, which has brought so much abuse upon my head, and say, whether it be possible for any dispassionate man to doubt, that I was justified in the use which I made of it.

But what is the meaning attributed to it by Dr. Phillpotts? That is a mystery which he has prudently locked up within his own breast. He appears only to insinuate, that according to Anastatius, the Canons were not admitted, because they had not been translated, and were therefore unknown. But to whom were they unknown? To the generality of the Latins! That is undoubtedly true, for they had not been translated into the book of Canons for the use of the Latin church. But were they unknown to the Popes? to Hadrian, whose legates presided in the Nicene Council? or to his successors, who wrote so many letters respecting the proceedings of the Council? Now, if they were not, what reason can be given, why these Pontiffs did not notify them to the Latin Church, but that they did not admit them?

In support, as it would seem, of his hypothesis, Dr. Phillpotts has favoured us with an English version of the passage from Anastatius, beginning with Sane notandum, &c. But there is something portentous in its length; the four lines of the original are multiplied into eight; and the words, quæ penes nos interpretata non habentur, are rendered, “which are not contained in the “ documents of that Council, which we have in our “ possession, translated into Latin.” It will suffice to observe, that this version says much more than Anastatius said: it even says, that which in all probability he could not have said without giving the lie to himself. For he has told us, that the Romans had a translation of the Council, the author of which had rendered the original text word for word. Verbum e verbo secutus. It was in the book of Canons for the government of the Latin church, that they were not translated.

He has also favoured us with a translation of the other passage which I have quoted, beginning with Ergo regulas, &c. “ Therefore the rules, “ which the Greeks say were set forth by the sixth “ Council, the See of Rome” (who could have expected this rendering of principalis sedes from the orthodoxy of Dr. Phillpotts?) “ admits in “ such manner in this seventh Council, that still “ those of them which contradict former canons
 “ or decrees of Popes, are in no measure admitted.”
 But does not this very passage speak of some Canons that are not admitted? Not in the opinion of Dr. Phillpotts, who argues thus: “ the second “ Nicene Council adopted some of these Canons,
 “ and gave to them the sanction of the Church:”—
 “ it is therefore manifest that such canons are not “ in the rejected class; nor, indeed, till this bold “ attempt of Dr. Lingard were they ever pretended “ to be.” Seldom have so many mistakes been crowded within so few lines. 1°. “ The Council

“ adopted some of these (Quinisextian) Canons.” It did not adopt some only ; it adopted and confirmed all without exception. 2°. “ It is manifest “ that such Canons are not in the rejected class.” Yet, if all were adopted by the Council, and some were rejected by the Popes, some of those adopted must have been in the rejected class. 3°. “ Nor, till this bold attempt of Dr. Lingard’s, “ were they ever pretended to be.” Yet every writer on these subjects, as far as I have been able to learn, has carefully pointed out to his readers, the very Canons which were rejected by the Pontiffs. Indeed, the Greeks have always made that rejection one of the chief grounds on which they attempt to justify their separation from the Roman Church.

I am aware, that I have already trespassed too far on the patience of your readers, and shall dismiss the remaining charges of Dr. Phillpotts with this general answer:—that Catholics admit the second Nicene Council and subscribe to its decree respecting the faith of the Church ; that they refer to the Acts as an historical document, but not as doctrinal authority binding their belief, and that they censure or approve the opinions of the individual speakers recorded in the Acts, according to their respective judgments. But as it is evident, that on the subject of general councils he has to learn the very rudiments of Catholic theology, I recommend the following passage to his notice:— “ Illud solum et totum est de fide, quod definitur.

Hinc plurima continentur in conciliis etiam generalibus, quæ non sunt de fide: scilicet quod est in eis obiter dictum; multo minus quod in sessionibus a variis prælatis, dum sententias proferunt, probatum est; multo etiam minus quæ a doctoribus in discussionem rei definiendæ præmittuntur aut allegantur." Veron, Reg. Fidei, c. 1. § iv. N° v.

In conclusion, allow me, Sir, to offer you my congratulations on the eminent services, which by your valuable works you have rendered to the Catholic cause. That tone of moderation and forbearance by which they are distinguished, will place in a more striking light the temerity and intemperance of this your new, and, as far as I can judge, unprovoked antagonist.

I have the honour to be,
dear Sir,

Your very obedient servant,

JOHN LINGARD."

Nº I.

Opinions of Foreign Universities on the Temporal Power of the Pope.

IN pursuance of Mr. Pitt's suggestions, three questions were sent to the Universities of the Sorbonne, Louvaine, Douay, Alcala and Salamanca. They were expressed in the following terms, and received the following answers:—

“ 1. Has the Pope or Cardinals, or any body of men,
“ or any individual of the Church of Rome, any civil “ authority, power, jurisdiction, or pre-eminence what“ soever, within the realm of England ?

“ 2. Can the Pope or Cardinals, or any body of men,
“ or any individual of the Church of Rome, absolve or “ dispense with his Majesty's subjects, from their oath
“ of allegiance, upon any pretext whatsoever ?

“ 3. Is there any principle in the tenets of the Catholic “ faith, by which Catholics are justified in not keeping “ faith with heretics, or other persons differing from “ them in religious opinions, in any transaction, either
“ of a public or a private nature ?”

The Universities answered unanimously :

“ 1. That the Pope or Cardinals, or any body of men,
“ or any individual of the Church of Rome, has not, nor “ have any civil authority, power, jurisdiction, or pre-“ eminence whatsoever, within the realm of England.

“ 2. That the Pope or Cardinals, or any body of men,
 “ or any individual of the Church of Rome, cannot ab“ solve or dispense with his Majesty’s subjects, from “ their oath of allegiance, upon any pretext whatsoever:

“ 3. That there is no principle in the tenets of the “ Catholic faith, by which Catholics are justified in not “ keeping faith with heretics, or other persons differing “ from them in religious opinions, in any transactions,
 “ either of a public or a private nature.”

The opinions of the universities of the Sorbonne, Louvaine, and Douay, were first received, and were transmitted to Mr. Pitt with the following letter:—

“ Sir,

“ The Committee of the English Catholics have the “ honour to lay before you, the opinions of the univer“ sities of Sorbonne, Louvaine, and Douay, which have “ been transmitted to us in consequence of your desire.

“ You will, we hope, see, from these opinions, that “ the sentiments of the most famous foreign bodies per“ fectly coincide with those which we had the honour
 “ of stating to you last year, as our firm and sincere “ tenets.

“ At the same time, we beg leave to call to your re“ membrance, that our opinions were fully stated to you “ previously to the obtaining those of the foreign uni“ versities; and that they were consulted, not as the “ rule by which we form our ideas of the duties of good “ subjects, but as a collateral proof to you, that our “ sentiments are consonant to those of the most en“ lightened and famous bodies of Catholic divines on “ the Continent, upon these subjects.

“ We have the honour to be,” &c. &c.

As soon as the other opinions were received, the committee transmitted them also to Mr. Pitt.

A translation of all these answers is inserted in the Appendix to the first volume of Mr. Butler's "Historical Memoirs of the English, Irish, and Scottish Catholics."

N° II.

The Oath taken by the English Roman Catholics, under the Provisions of the Act passed for their Relief, in the Year 1791.

" I, A. B. do hereby declare, That I do profess the Roman Catholic religion."

" I, A. B. do sincerely promise and swear, That I will be faithful, and bear true allegiance to his Majesty King George the Third, and him will defend, to the utmost of my power, against all conspiracies and attempts whatever, that shall be made against his person, crown or dignity; and I will do my utmost endeavour to disclose and make known to his Majesty, his heirs and successors, all treasons and traitorous conspiracies which may be formed against him or them: And I do faithfully promise to maintain, support and defend, to the utmost of my power, the succession of the crown; which succession, by an act, intituled, ' An Act for the further Limitation of the Crown, and better securing the Rights and Liberties of the Subject,' is and stands limited to the Princess Sophia, electress and duchess dowager of Hanover, and the heirs of her body, being Protestants; hereby “ utterly renouncing and abjuring any obedience or allegiance unto any other person claiming or pretending a right to the crown of these realms : And I do swear, that I do reject and detest, as an unchristian and impious position, that it is lawful to murder or destroy any person or persons whatsoever, for or under pretence of their being heretics or infidels ; and also, that unchristian and impious principle, that faith is not to be kept with heretics or infidels : And I further declare, that it is not an article of my faith, and that I do renounce, reject, and abjure the opinion, that princes, excommunicated by the Pope and council, or any authority of the see of Rome, or by any authority whatsoever, may be deposed or murdered by their subjects, or any person whatsoever : And I do promise, that I will not hold, maintain or abet any such opinion, or any other opinions contrary to what is expressed in this declaration : And I do declare, that I do not believe that the Pope of Rome, or any other foreign prince, prelate, state or potentate hath, or ought to have, any temporal or civil jurisdiction, power, superiority, or pre-eminence, directly or indirectly, within this realm : And I do solemnly, in the presence of God, profess, testify and declare, that I do make this declaration, and every part thereof, in the plain and ordinary sense of the words of this oath, without any evasion, equivocation, or mental reservation whatever ; and without any dispensation already granted by the Pope, or any authority of the see of Rome, or any person whatever ; and without thinking that I am, or can be, acquitted before God or man, or absolved of this declaration, or any part thereof, although the Pope, or any other person or authority whatsoever, shall dispense with or annul the same, or declare it was null and void.”

A similar oath was prescribed to the Irish Roman Catholics, by the act passed for their relief, in the 33d year of his late Majesty. No Roman Catholic objects to either oath.

N° III.

Letter on the undivided Allegiance of Roman Catholics to their Sovereigns; first inserted in the Old Times.

AT the general annual meeting of the Roman Catholics at the Crown and Anchor Tavern, on the 25th of last month, THANKS WERE UNANIMOUSLY VOTED TO THE GENTLEMEN OF THE ENGLISH BAR, WHO PETITIONED PARLIAMENT IN FAVOUR OF THE LATE CATHOLIC RELIEF BILL,—WITH A STRONG EXPRESSION OF THE GENERAL SURPRISE AND CONCERN OF THE MEMBERS OF THE ASSOCIATION, AT THE CHARGE OF DIVIDED ALLEGIANCE LATELY MADE IN PARLIAMENT AGAINST THE WHOLE CATHOLIC BODY.

1. This vote of thanks to the gentlemen of the English bar, who presented petitions to Parliament in favour of the late bill for Catholic emancipation, was certainly very proper. Their petition was highly honourable to the Catholic cause, essentially served it, and affords us great reason to hope that, in all our future applications to Parliament, and in every other exertion which we shall make to deliver ourselves from the shackles which still enthrall us, we shall always have efficient support from the gentlemen of the English bar. None know more than they the hardships of our condition; none have more kind or more honourable hearts; to them, therefore, we particularly look up;—on their active and effective support we confidently rely. Some of them are yet estranged from us: this we know, and lament; but we trust the estrangement will not be of long duration. In January 1783, a petition for relief was presented to the Irish House of Commons by the Irish Catholics: every lawyer in the house declared against it; and on the 11th day of the following February it was rejected, with marked indignity, by a majority of 208 votes to 23. In March or April 1784, (little more than one year after this contemptuous rejection of the petition), a bill for the relief of the Roman Catholics was brought into the House: every lawyer then voted for it; and it was triumphantly carried through both Houses of Parliament, with scarcely a dissentient voice. Surely it is impossible that the progress of reason should at any time be slower at the English bar, than it was, on this memorable occasion, at the Irish. This sudden change in the Irish House of Commons should never be forgotten. It shows, that a division against us, however numerous, should not appal us, or induce us to relax our efforts; and that, even when appearances are most against us, we may be on the eve of success.

2. In respect to the charge of divided allegiance recently brought against us and our whole body, I beg permission to say,—that when I first heard this charge, I was lost in grief and astonishment, particularly when I heard by whom it was made.

I am sure that there is not in the united empire a single Catholic, whatever his rank or condition in life, who was not equally grieved and astonished at this most unmerited and most unfounded accusation. Upon what ground is it brought? Is it upon our actions? We defy the ingenuity of man to mention any act of ours that justifies such a charge. Is it upon our principles? Then let the alleged principle be pointed out, and if it be of a nature which justifies the charge, we shall instantly and explicitly protest against it, and indubitably show that it is not, and never has been, a tenet of our creed, and that we have repeatedly rejected it, and every tenet of such a tendency.

It is said that we acknowledge allegiance to the Pope. We disclaim any allegiance to him; he is not our king, our sovereign, or our liege lord. King George IV. and the heirs of Princess Sophia of Hanover, being Protestants, (to whom the crown is limited by the Act of Settlement),—these, and these only, we acknowledge to be our kings, our queens, our royal sovereigns: to them, and to them only, we profess allegiance: and more pure, more perfect, or more undivided allegiance than that which we profess to them does not exist, and cannot be imagined. The Pope has not the slightest right to allegiance, or to a particle of it from us. This is the universal belief of all Catholics, from the Duke of Norfolk to the footman who waits behind the Duke of Norfolk's chair.

To this unreserved, absolute, and undivided allegiance, we have most explicitly sworn in the oaths prescribed by the statutes of the 18th, 31st, and 33d of his late majesty. This allegiance, the opinions of the foreign universities, taken by the desire of Mr. Pitt, declare to be due from all subjects to their sovereigns by the universal doctrine of the Catholic church: these opinions also explicitly state, that no allegiance is due to the Pope from any subjects but his own.

It is said, that the spiritual obedience which we owe to the Pope conflicts with our allegiance, and works a division in it. Mark how I dispose of this objection in a breath! Divided allegiance is disloyalty—disloyalty is sin; we owe no obedience whatever to the Pope when he commands us to sin. Let me suppose a case which we think impossible? that the Pope should propose to us something derogatory of true and undivided allegiance, we should turn from him with disgust. We should say to him, "Arroint! Thy words are not the words of God; they are the words of the Evil One!"—We should answer as our ancestors did to Pope Boniface VIII. when he ordered King Edward I. not to make war on the king of Scotland—"We do not, we will not, we cannot, we ought not to permit our lord the king, to do any of the things aforesaid, even if he were ever so desirous to do them."*

3. The Popes themselves have unequivocally and repeatedly disclaimed any right to the allegiance of any subjects but their own. In 1682, the Gallican church subscribed four articles. By the first they declare,— "That the power of the Pope does not extend to things civil or temporal; that in temporals, kings and princes are not subject to the ecclesiastical power; that they cannot, directly or indirectly, be deposed by the power of the keys, or their subjects discharged by them from the obedience which they owe to their sovereigns, or from their oaths of allegiance." This is the first article of the declaration; the three other articles relate to certain points of ecclesiastical discipline. All the four were signed by all the prelates of France—by all its secular, by all its regular clergy. Out of France, some objections were made to THE THREE LAST articles—none whatever to the FIRST.† Can a more complete disclaimer to the Pope's right to temporal power, or of his right to the allegiance of subjects, or to any portion of it, be imagined? Now, up to the moment of the French revolution, every prelate of France signed this declaration,—yet the Pope instituted every such prelate to his see; every secular, every regular priest signed it,—yet the Pope admitted every such secular, every such regular priest into his communion. Nay, more;*—in the negotiations in 1811, between Pope Pius VII. and Napoleon, the latter vehemently insisted on the Pope's sanctioning the Gallican declaration of 1682; the Pope refused to sign the three last articles; but the first—that which confines the power of the Pope to spiritual concerns—that which proclaims the civil independence of sovereigns—that which propounds the absolute and irreversible right of sovereigns to the allegiance of their subjects, and denies it to the Pope—this article, this very article, the Pope assented to without any hesitation. He declared, that “if the dispute turned on that article only, he would subscribe it without difficulty.” What, then, becomes of the charge of divided allegiance? We reject it; the Pope disclaims it; the whole Catholic world laughs at it; then let us hear no more of it.

* "Resistance of the Sovereigns and Legislature of England to the attempts of the Popes to establish in it their Temporal Power."—Historical Memoirs of English, Irish, and Scottish Catholics, Ch. VII. s. 3, p. 36. 3d Edition.

† This circumstance I have repeatedly noticed in my "Historical Memoirs,"—my "Book of the Roman Catholic Church," and the present publication: I again beg the Reader's attention to it.

4. Permit me now to avow a suspicion, that if those who make this charge would consult their own minds, they would find that they themselves scarcely believe it. There are persons who profess to discern some threatening clouds in the north of the political horizon, and to think that they advance angrily, steadily, and not very slowly, towards England. Supposing the prognostics of these gentlemen to be realized—that all these clouds should lour over our coasts, and that the Pope (a most ridiculous supposition) should appear in the midst of them, and direct the storm! would any one gravely say, that, in the impending conflict, the Catholics should be distrusted? If the Lord Chancellor should be then asked, whether the allegiance of the Catholic peers, beyond the bar of the House, should be relied on as much as the allegiance of the Protestant peers within it,—would he doubt?—would he not immediately answer in the affirmative?—If the Speaker of the House of Commons were asked, whether the allegiance of the Catholics in those ranks from which members of the House are usually chosen, should, on such an occasion, be as much depended on as the allegiance of the actual members of his House,—would not he, too, answer in the affirmative? If similar questions were proposed to the grand juries, or to the magistrates of the quarter sessions, would they not return the same affirmative answer? What, then, becomes of the charge?

5. I call upon my countrymen to think of the conduct of the Catholics when the Spanish Armada threatened our coast. Every cruelty, every indignity which the most atrocious policy could invent, the Catholics had suffered from queen Elizabeth and her ministers. The Catholics knew that Pope Pius V. had excommunicated the queen—had deposed her—had absolved them from their allegiance to her, and implicated them in her excommunication, if they continued true to her; that Pope Sixtus, the reigning Pope, had renewed the excommunication—had called on every Catholic prince to execute the sentence; and that Philip II. by far the most powerful monarch of the time, had undertaken it—had lined the shores of the Continent with troops ready, at a moment's notice, for the invasion of England, and had covered the sea with an armament which was proclaimed to be invincible. In this awful moment, when England stood in need of all her strength, and the slightest diversion of any part of it might have proved fatal to her, the worth of a Catholic's loyalty was fully shown. "Some," says Hume, "equipped ships at their own charge, and gave the command of them to Protestants; others were active in animating their tenants, their vassals, and their neighbours, in defence of their country." "Some," says the writer of an intercepted letter, printed in the second volume of the Harleian Miscellany, "by their letters to the council, signed by their own hand, offered that they would make adventures of their own lives in defence of the queen, whom they named their undoubted sovereign, lady and queen, against all foreign foes, though they were sent from the Pope, or at his commandment; yea, some did offer that they would present their bodies in the foremost ranks." Lord Montague, a zealous Catholic, and the only temporal peer who ventured to oppose the act for the queen's supremacy, in the first year of her reign, brought a band of horsemen to Tilbury, commanded by himself, his son, and his grandson, thus perilling his whole house in the expected conflict. The annals of the world do not present a more glorious or a more affecting spectacle than the zeal, the undivided allegiance, shown on this memorable occasion by the poor and persecuted, but loyal, but honourable Catholics! Nor should it be forgotten that, in this account of their loyalty, all historians are agreed. Then, is it not shameful to charge the Catholic descendants of these admirable Catholics with divided allegiance?—thus to spurt disloyalty in their faces?

6. It is remarkable that the kingdom abounds in double allegiance, and no notice is taken of it. At this present time, the presumptive heir of the Crown owes, as Duke of York, allegiance to King George IV. of England, and also owes, as bishop of Osnaburgh, allegiance to King George II. of Hanover.

Has there ever been a Catholic mean enough to talk of this double allegiance of his Royal Highness? Such meanness never entered into our minds.

No! THE CATHOLIC RELIGION IS THE RELIGION OF GENTLEMEN, AND OF THOSE WHO THINK LIKE GENTLEMEN. ALL THEY ASK IS, THAT THEIR ADVERSARIES SHOULD THINK AND ACT AS GENTLEMEN IN THEIR REGARD.—The duke of Richmond is duke d'Aubigni, and possesses fiefs in France. The duke of Marlborough is a prince of Germany, and possesses a German principality. The duke of Wellington is a grandee of the first class in Spain, and holds large territorial possessions in Valentia. All these illustrious persons owe allegiance to the sovereigns within whose territories their possessions are situate; all, too, owe allegiance to his Britannic Majesty. This double allegiance has not been, and ought not to be, reproached to them. But while the questionably double allegiances of all these distinguished personages has ever been passed over in silence, and perhaps never thought of, double allegiance has been invented for Catholics; and they have been criminated for it, and for all its possible or rather ideal consequences. Is this fair? Is it just? Is it honourable? No! Let us, then, hear no more of this charge. How can it enter into the mind of an honourable man to make it?

7. The belief of Alexander the Great in virtue, when he received the cup from his physician, who was accused of a wish to poison him, has been deservedly praised. Will Protestants, in respect to their Catholic brethren, never aspire to the same belief in virtue? Will they always remain blind to the loyalty of the Catholics?—to their immense services in their fleets and armies?—Will they never recollect, that if their ungenerous accusations should drive the Catholics from these, frightful indeed would be their solitude? Will the Protestants always forget, that, when all her Protestant colonies rebelled against England, Catholic Canada alone was true to her allegiance? Will they—but the subject is endless. If there be one thing more certain than another, it is that which we now confidently assert: THAT THE LOYALTY OF THE CATHOLICS OF THE UNITED EMPIRE IS PURE, PERFECT AND UNDIVIDED; THAT IT WILL BEAR ANY TRIAL; THAT, IN EVERY TRIAL, IT WILL BE FOUND EMINENTLY PURE; AND THAT IT IS MOST UNGENEROUS AND MOST UNWISE TO DISTRUST IT.

CHARLES BUTLER.

N^o IV.

Letter on the Coronation Oath, first inserted in the Old Times.

FEW Parliamentary documents possess, in any point of view, so much importance as the speech delivered on the 25th of last month, in the House of Lords, by his Royal Highness the Duke of York, on presenting the petition of the Dean and Canons of Windsor against granting any further relief to his Majesty's Roman Catholic subjects.

Lamenting, as they must do, that his Royal Highness is so adverse to their petitions, still the Roman Catholics are grateful for his open avowal of his opinions, and of the reasons upon which they are grounded. It allows them free liberty to discuss them with the respect due to his exalted rank.

Availing himself of this circumstance, an humble individual of their number trusts that he may, without offence or impropriety, submit to his Royal Highness some observations upon the following passage in his speech.

His Royal Highness states in it, that he “wished to ask whether their lordships had considered the situation in which they might place the King, or whether they recollected the oath which his Majesty had taken at the altar, to his people, upon his coronation? He begged to read the words of the oath. ‘I will, to the utmost of my power, maintain the law of God, the true profession of the Gospel, and the Protestant reformed religion, established by law; and I will preserve unto the bishops and clergy of this realm, and to the churches committed to their charge, all such rights and privileges as by law do or shall appertain to them, or any of them.’ Their lordships, continued his Royal Highness, must remember that ours is a Protestant King, who knows no mental reservation, and whose situation is different from that of any other person in this country; that his Royal Highness, and every other individual in this country, could be released from his oath by the authority of Parliament; but the King could not. The oath, as he had always understood, is a solemn obligation, entered into by the person who took it, from which no act of his own could release him; but the King was the third part of the State, without whose voluntary consent no act of the Legislature could be valid, and he could not relieve himself from the obligation of an oath.”

With the utmost deference and respect to his Royal Highness, it is suggested to his consideration, that the expressions copied from his speech give rise to the following observations:—

I. Is it not the bounden duty of the Sovereign of these realms to give his royal assent to every bill presented to him by the two Houses of Parliament, which he himself believes to be conducive to the welfare of the empire?

In an ancient statute, (25 of Edw. III. stat. 6), this is unequivocally expressed. It is there said, that “the right of the crown of England and the law of the realm, is such, that upon the mischiefs and damages which happen to this realm, the King ought and is bound by his oath, with the concord of the people in Parliament assembled, to make remedy and law.” Does it not follow, that if the two Houses of Parliament should present a bill to the Monarch, for the repeal of the laws remaining in force against the Roman Catholics, and the Sovereign should be of opinion that not to repeal those laws would bring mischief and damage to the realm, he would be constitutionally bound, in the words of the act, to make the remedy, by assenting to the bill of repeal? Would not any oath taken by the Monarch not to assent to such a bill be a nullity? Must not every such oath be necessarily understood to be accompanied by an implied condition, that nothing contained in it should oblige him to act against the principles of the constitution, or the rights or welfare of his subjects, or to forbear from assenting to any bill which enacted any measure for their good.

II. No prospective act of the Legislature can discharge the King from the paramount duty thus imposed upon him, of giving his assent to a bill presented to him by the two Houses of Parliament, which he himself approves of, and deems salutary. In this the highest authorities in the law agree.

We beg leave to call the attention of his Royal Highness to what is said by Sir William Blackstone of the omnipotence of Parliament; of its uncontrollable power in "making, restraining, abrogating, and repealing laws concerning matters of all possible denomination, ecclesiastical or temporal." He avers most explicitly, that "Parliament can alter the established religion of the land." This is the very strongest act of legislation that can be supposed. His Royal Highness must be sensible, that a repeal of the few laws yet remaining in force against the Roman Catholics is immeasurably distant from it.

Lord Coke lays it down as a constitutional maxim, and a fundamental principle of law, that "acts against the power of Parliament bind not."

In the 21st of Richard II. (Rot. Parl. 50. 52.), an oath was taken by the lords spiritual and temporal, and also by the proctors of the clergy, and the knights in Parliament, that "they would not reverse, break, irritate, annul, or repeal any of the judgments, establishments, statutes, or ordinances made, rendered, or given in that Parliament." "But our Lord the King," continues the record, "having advised and deliberated with the prelacy and clergy of this realm, well understood that he could not bind his successors, Kings of England, by their oath or any other means, against the liberty of the crown."

Thus stood the ancient Constitution of England.

At the Revolution, the same principle was most directly recognized. It is well known to his Royal Highness, that doubts were, at that time, suggested upon the language of the then existing coronation oath; that the Convention Parliament took into consideration the establishment of an oath which should remove those doubts; that a committee was appointed for this purpose; that the committee prepared the form of a new oath; that their report upon it was received by the House; that the bill was framed, and the oath inserted in it; that the King was made to swear by it, that "he would govern the people of the kingdom of England; and all the dominions thereunto belonging, according to the statutes in Parliament agreed on, and the laws and customs of the same;" and that the coronation oath has continued in this form till the present time. While this act was in the House, King William's council had in contemplation the act commonly called "The Toleration Act," for the relief of the Protestant Dissenters, which was passed immediately afterwards. A doubt was suggested, whether the King would not be prevented, by the proposed oath, from giving his royal assent to the Toleration Act. The point was debated in the committee; a proviso was framed to remove the doubt, the proviso was debated, and every speaker declared it unnecessary and unconstitutional. "It is," said Sir Robert Sawyer, "the first proviso of the nature that ever was in any bill; it seems to strike at the legislative power."—"I am against the proviso," said Mr. Ford: "these words, 'established by law,' hinder not the King in passing any bill, in the case of Dissenters."—"It is granted by all," said Sir Joseph Tredenham, "that by 'law' is meant what is in the Legislature's power." The consequence was, that the proviso was unanimously rejected. Might it not be respectfully suggested to his Royal Highness, that what passed in the House of Commons on that occasion, is a complete Parliamentary recognition of all the doctrine which it is necessary for us now to contend for?

III. But let us consider the language of the coronation oath.

This, it might be humbly suggested to his Royal Highness, forms no objection to the Sovereign's giving his royal assent to any bill like that which is now solicited for the relief of his Roman Catholics subjects.

By the first clause of the coronation oath, his Majesty swears "to govern the people according to the statutes in Parliament agreed on, and the laws and customs of the realm." This was evidently meant to denote, not only the statutes, laws, and customs then existing, but those also which should afterwards become part of the national law, in consequence of any subsequent legislation of Parliament.

In the next clause, his Majesty's swears "to maintain the Protestant reformed religion established by law," and to preserve to the bishops and clergy of this realm, and to the churches committed to their care, all such rights and privileges as by law did or should belong or appertain to them or any of them. This could only mean the Protestant reformed religion, the churches, the rights, and the privileges, which from time to time, should, under the actual or any future legislation of Parliament, form the church establishment of the realm.

It might also be submitted to his Royal Highness, that even if the coronation oath should be thought to preclude the Monarch from such a concurrence, it would be no objection to his repealing the laws now solicited to be repealed, as the repeal of these laws will not interfere with the legal establishment of the church, with its hierarchy, with any of its churches, or with any of their temporal or spiritual pre-eminences, rights or privileges.

IV. Hitherto our observations have been confined to the Coronation oath. The attention of his Royal Highness might now be called to a circumstance which is inseparately attached to every oath.

Is it not universally allowed, that in every case where one person takes an oath to another, the person to whom, or in whose favour the oath has been taken, may, at his pleasure, release, either wholly or partially, the person taking the oath from all the obligations to which he bound himself by it?

“ The Coronation oath it made to the people, as represented by Parliament.” May I not therefore ask, whether, upon the supposition that the Coronation oath really extends to the present case—(which, however, I must respectfully repeat that it does not)—the people represented by the Parliament, being the persons and the only persons entitled to the benefit of the oath, have not full power and authority to release the Monarch who took the oath, and all his successors, from its obligation?

V. The conduct of his Majesty’s august predecessors incontrovertibly shows that they, the Parliament, and the nation, have uniformly construed the Coronation oath in the sense which I have presumed to suggest.

1. Each of the three founders of the Protestant Church of England, Henry VIII. Edward VI. and Elizabeth, swore, at their coronations, to support the Catholic religion as it was then established. Each proscribed that religion, and established another. Can any thing be alleged in defence of those alterations of the national religion by the monarchs who had thus sworn to preserve it, except that their Parliament consented to the change, and that their consent freed the monarchs from the obligations of their Coronation oaths? If this defence was available in those cases, why is it not equally available in the present?

2. I have mentioned, that King William III. in the 1st year of his reign, took the Coronation oath in the present form, and swore by it to defend the Protestant religion ; but almost immediately afterwards he assented to a bill, which altered the oath of supremacy from a positive affirmation of the Crown's ecclesiastical supremacy in this realm, to a negative assertion, that this supremacy was not possessed by any foreign power. This substitution of one oath of supremacy for another, admitted into power, place, and all other civil rights of subjects, a numerous description of persons who, till that time, had been excluded from them. King William's assent to this bill must therefore be considered to be a breach of his Coronation oath, unless our interpretation of it be admitted.

3. At a subsequent time the same monarch took an oath to maintain the church of Scotland, which was at that time Episcopalian ; but he soon afterwards made a new settlement of the Scottish church in the Presbyterian form. This was a total alteration of the constitution of the church of Scotland, and only justifiable, in respect to the Coronation oath, by our interpretation of it.

4. When, in the reign of Queen Anne, Scotland was united to England, an oath was formed by the Parliament of Scotland, by which every King was required at his accession, to take an oath to preserve the Protestant religion and Presbyterian church government in Scotland. This Act was confirmed by the Act of Union.

Notwithstanding these acts—notwithstanding his own Coronation oath, his late Majesty gave his sanction to the acts of the 18th, the 31st, the 33d, and the 57th years of his reign, for the relief of his English, Irish, and Scottish Catholic subjects. If the pains, penalties, and disabilities, repealed by these statutes were numbered, it would be found that they amounted to more than three-fourths of the whole penal code.

Grateful beyond expression as the Roman Catholics truly are, for the large extent of relief which these legislative acts of wise policy and beneficence have successively extended to them, they yet presume to inquire what objection can lie, from the Coronation oath, to the repeal of the small remaining number of the penal acts, that did not apply, in some manner at least, to each of these salutary acts of his late Majesty?

It is said that these acts did no more than confer on the Roman Catholics the blessings of toleration; but that the relief now solicited would confer on them political power. Taking for granted, but not allowing, this to be the fact, did not the Act of Toleration admit the Protestant Dissenters of England—did not the Act for the settlement of the Protestant religion in Scotland admit the Scottish Presbyterians to a full participation of political power with his Majesty's other Protestant subjects?—Never did the kingdom abound with abler lawyers—never did the crown possess more able or more constitutional advisers—never was an opposition to the crown more active or more jealous than at the periods in which these laws were passed. Yet, was a murmur of disapprobation of them heard? Was the Coronation oath so much as mentioned?

VI. The claim of Ireland to the relief solicited by the present bill is particularly strong.

1. When Mr. Pitt proposed the Articles of Union to the House of Commons, he thus expressed himself:—“No man can say that, in the present state of things, and while Ireland continues a separate kingdom, full concessions can be made to the Catholics without endangering the state, and shaking the constitution to the centre.” Is not this saying that, after the Union should have taken place, full concessions might be made to Ireland without danger?

2. The member who proposed the Union expressed himself in similar terms.

3. Such, also, is the language of the Act of Union: It enacted, "that every of the Lords and Commons of the Parliament of the United Kingdom, in the first and every succeeding Parliament, should, until the Parliament of the United Kingdom should otherwise provide, take the oaths then provided to be taken," Is not this an explicit intimation that a change of oaths, after the Union, in favour of the Catholics, was then contemplated? Was not a sure and certain hope of it held out to them by these words? Is it not incontrovertible proof, that all the statesmen who favoured the Union were convinced that Catholic emancipation might be granted, without affecting the Coronation oath?

4. In the debate in the House of Commons on the petition of the Irish Catholics, on Wednesday, the 25th of May 1808, Mr. Elliot thus expressed himself:— "I do not rise for the purpose of entering into any discussion on the general topic, but in consequence of what has fallen from my noble friend opposite (Lord Castlereagh), merely to advert to the circumstances of the Union, of which I may be supposed to have some official knowledge, and of the expectations held out to the Catholics, in order to conciliate their acquiescence in that measure. My noble friend has said, that no pledge was given to the Catholics that their full emancipation was to be the immediate consequence of this measure, in consideration of their support. It is true, indeed, that no bond was given to the Catholics on that point; but there were certainly expectations, and something like promises, held out to them, which, in my mind, ought to be more binding than a bond. So strongly was that idea felt by my noble friend, and by my right honourable friend

“ (Mr. Canning), and by a right honourable gentleman
 “ now no more (Mr. Pitt), that they quitted office “ because they could not carry the measure ; and when,
 “ upon Mr. Pitt’s return to office, he opposed the going “ into a committee, it was not from any objection to “ the measure, but to the time.”

Here, but with all the deference due to his Majesty’s advisers, who are supposed to be hostile to the present “ bill, is it not lawful for me to ask, “ whether, when
 “ so much is said of the Coronation oath, some regard “ should not be had to the expectations held out to the “ Roman Catholics at the time of the Union ; and by “ which, most confessedly, their co-operation in that “ measure was obtained ?”

VII. Strange, however, as after so much has been said on the subject it must necessarily appear, all this discussion, so far as Ireland is concerned in it, is absolutely superfluous—a mere waste of words.

The Coronation oath was fixed in Ireland by the 1st of William and Mary. In Ireland at that time, Roman Catholics held their seats and voted in the House of Lords ; Roman Catholic commoners were eligible to the House of Commons, and all civil and military offices were open to them. They were deprived of these rights by the acts of the 3d and 4th of William and Mary, and the 1st and 2d of queen Anne. It is most clear, that the Coronation oath can only refer to the system of law which was in force when the act that prescribed it was passed. Now, all the Irish laws meant to be repealed by the present bill are subsequent to that act. To those laws, therefore, or to any similar law, the Coronation oath cannot, with a semblance of propriety, be referred.

VIII. Here, at length, I finish my legal disquisition on this important subject. Permit me to add, that whatever may be the opinion of his Royal Highness upon it, his wishes must, I am confident, be favourable to the cause of the Roman Catholics? How many of them have been his companions in arms? What multitudes of them have fought and bled in the service of their king and country? His Royal Highness must know and feel, that his Majesty has no subjects more attached to his sacred person and government; and that, if the hour of danger should arrive (and the horizon is not without clouds that threaten it), there are none whose loyalty would be of greater value, or more to be depended on, than those sought to be relieved by the present bill. With the following historical fact, and one observation upon it, I shall close this discussion.

The chancellor Michel de l'Hospital was the greatest magistrate whom the kingdom of France has produced. "By his conduct," says the President Hénault, "the conduct of every succeeding magistrate has been always tried." By his counsels and exertions peace was made between the Catholics and Calvinists, and the latter were admitted to the free exercise of their religious worship, and the full enjoyment of their civil rights. Some selfish leaders of the Calvinists could not conceal the vexation which this edict gave them. "This single stroke of a pen," they said, "is the ruin of more of our churches, than armies would have destroyed in ten years." The English having taken the town of Havre, the king and queen mother proceeded in person to the siege, and the Chancellor accompanied them. They were received with acclamations of joy. On one occasion, the chancellor remarked to them the ardour and bravery of the troops in mounting a branch. "Which of them," he exclaimed to the monarch, "are Catholics — which are Protestants? which are your bravest soldiers, your best subjects?"

“ All are equally brave and good. This is the effect of “ the edict, against which you are cautioned. See how “ it re-unites the royal family, restores to us our “ brothers, our relations, our friends, and leads us out “ hand in hand against our enemy, and makes him feel “ how respectable we are for our virtue and power when “ united among ourselves !” Might not some friend of the Roman Catholics address his Royal Highness in these very terms ? “ Favour then,” might he not respectfully say to his Royal Highness, “ the humble “ prayer of the Roman Catholics ! Let not the penal “ code, which yet remains in force against them, con“ tinue to torment such meritorious subjects. Is not “ our excellent constitution a system of comprehension
“ and humanity ? Does it not prescribe, that the “ genius, the talents, the valour, the industry, and the “ labour of all his Majesty’s subjects, should have equal “ openings to exertions, equal shares of rewards ? This
“ and nothing but this, your Roman Catholic subjects
“ petition for. This, and nothing but this, is granted “ them by the present bill.”
